

Soft-Rot Disease Discovered on Corn

Madison, Wis. (Science Service)—A new soft-rot, discovered on a farm near the Wisconsin river in Wisconsin and in other localities in Wisconsin, Maryland and the Carolinas is now under study here.

The soft-rot kills corn plants by attacking the stems so that they eventually break and the plants fall to the ground. Losses due to the disease on the farm where it was discovered amounted to about ten per cent of the crop.

Research scientists at the University of Wisconsin have discovered that the cause of the disease is a bacterium of the coliform group which appears to be introduced in overhead spray irrigation. It was observed that the soft-rot occurs only when river or stream water is sprayed on the plants from above and not when the same water is used in furrow irrigation.

Asteroid Named for Ancient Greek King

Cincinnati (Science Service)—An asteroid first spotted in 1957 has now been officially named Menelaus, for the legendary Greek hero who was King of Sparta and husband of the beautiful Helen of Troy, whose kidnapping resulted in the Trojan Wars.

The asteroid, or minor planet, previously known as 1957 MK, was discovered by Dr. S. B. Nicholson of Mt. Wilson and Palomar Observatories, Pasadena, Calif. By long-accepted custom, persons who discover asteroids name them. Dr. Nicholson said the name was selected to enable another famous Greek to join his compatriots to the east of Jupiter.

News of the naming of an asteroid for Menelaus is being sent to astronomers throughout the world by way of a Minor Planet Circular, issued by the Cincinnati Observatory here.

Scientist Develops Differential Analyzer

Washington (Science Service)—A scientist at the National Bureau of Standards here has developed a "differential analyzer" that combines the best features of the two main types of computers, analog and digital.

The proposed analyzer, developed by H. K. Skramstad of the Bureau's data processing systems laboratory, is expected to be used in simulating the problems met in designing missiles and aircraft. Combining features of analog and digital computers provides greater precision in solving such problems than is possible with an analog computer alone.

The new system gives the advantages of high speed and continuous representation of variables obtained with analog computers and the high precision and dynamic range obtained with digital computers.

Cuba Expected To Continue Seizures

Havana (AP)—The semi-official newspaper Revolution Monday predicted a speed-up in government seizures of United States-owned properties and "total elimination of Yankee imperialism in our nation."
