Small Worlds Around Us By Lynn M. Watkins

This Poor Roach Could Not Crawl Downward

It would be natural to presume that there would be an oddball in every strata of living creatures; one that would be a non-conformist or peculiar because of a physical or mental quirk.

The world of the insects would be no exception. This character was about the oddest of the oddballs. He was a roach, one of the most hated of the insects. He had an affliction that made him a freak and his life a living nightmare.

For some unknown reason he couldn't crawl downward. Once he arrived at the top of any object on which he was ascending, he was confronted with his ever-present dilemma; how to get back down. He wasn't afraid of high places, he was just incapable of getting down once he was up.

He couldn't get his reverse gear shifted whereby he could back down; he only went in the direction his head was pointing as long as it wasn't pointing downward. Once up, where he aspired to be, he was stymied; he dared not the downward heading. It was a terrible handicap.

However, to his everlasting credit, let it be recorded that he never became discouraged even though he always flunked the final test so many times his back ached. For a lowly bug he possessed something a kin to courage and fortitude.

He came close to a solution several times in a very logical way. He would just let loose and fall. He didn't understand gravity enough to know that it worked and that what went up must come down.

Then one evening when the house was in semi-darkness, he ventured again on his one-way trip. Just why he decided to go up the kitchen wall will never be known, but he often did the unpredictable. He was a roach, and didn't know that one must learn by past mistakes, so he stupidly climbed the kitchen wall.

Arriving at the ceiling, there was only one way he could go, horizontally across the ceiling. Arriving at the far wall, there was no way except to crawl back.

Any of the four walls presented the same problem. He tried it for an hour, back and forth, around and around.

He walked without getting off the ceiling until he was completely exhausted. Then, the solution came to him; he let loose. Down he tumbled, head over heels, right into the very center of the gas stove.

Prowl Car Rams Vehicle Fleeing Scene of Holdup

Spokane — (UPI) — Two suspected holdup men were captured here Tuesday after a policeman rammed his prowl car into the rear of a fleeing vehicle amid a hail of bullets.

Two other men, one possibly wounded and one possibly armed, escaped on foot after the smashup about 2:20 a.m.

The chase had begun after two men were spotted running from the scene of the second of the motel holdups within a few minutes of each other just after 2 a.m.

Shots Returned

The men jumped into a car, which sped away, and began firing. Officers in three one-man cars returned the fire with shotguns. Police Chief Clifford Payne said the robbers' car was hit at least 21 times by police bullets.

Patrolman Robert G. Bailor managed to smash his car into the fleeing vehicle and forced it into a restaurant parking lot. Bailor was only shaken up but his prowl car was demolished.

Portland Man Held

One man, identified as James D. Long, 24, Psadadena, Tex., was thrown under the car and received a possible fractured leg.

Another man, identified as Raymond L. Lorentzen, 23, Portland, Ore., received minor cuts. Both were booked for investigation.

Robert Lewis Deurbrouck, on duty at the Travelodge motel, said the holdup men took between $600 and $700 in cash there. At the Downtown, Garry L. Rofe said the men took the cash box and money bags containing an undetermined amount of money.

Struck on Head

Both men were struck on the head and Deurbrouck's wound required several stitches to close.

Chief Payne said $1,500 was recovered along with one of two automatic pistols used during the chase, and a supply of burglary tools.

Anchorage, Alaska — (UPI) — A strong earthquake reported off the coast of Alaska apparently went unfeared here even though several small earthquakes have rocked Alaska during the past week.

The Family Council

Editors Note: The Family Council consists of a Judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Gilbert B. — I can't upset Mother now. Nancy R.—He doesn't realize how happy we could be.

Gilbert B.—I am a bachelor of 50. I know people are ready to call me a woman-hater because of it, but I'm nothing of the sort. I've always enjoyed the company of women and have been in love a couple of times. Yet things never worked out in such a way that I got to the altar. Circumstances always interfered.

Recently I have been enjoying the company of a divorcee with grown, married children. I definitely want to marry her—but we must wait, and I feel she should be willing to do this if she loves me as she says she does.

The problem is that my mother (now ill and past 80) has taken an intense dislike to Nancy. She has always hated divorcees. I don't want to upset her by forcing things at this time. Is that unreasonable?

Nancy R.—I was married more than 25 years before I got my divorce, and although I had never been happy with my husband, I see I am more unhappy without a husband. I am not used to being so lonely. My children are married and I don't want to be a burden on them.

I feel I sincerely love Gil, but it's unfair of him to ask me to wait. After all, we aren't kids and haven't a lifetime ahead of us. We have all too short a time to be happy together.

When Gil says wait, I feel he is really asking me to wait until his mother dies. This is a terrible thought to me because I am eager to get married, but I don't wish for anyone's death. Yet as long as she lives I must be lonely and miserable. Gil doesn't realize how happy we could be.

The Council: Nancy is certainly right in not wanting to wait for the death of an elderly woman to have an opportunity to find happiness. But we are afraid she has chosen the wrong man for her purposes.

A man of 50 has been ripe for marriage a good 25 years. Yet somehow he has always evaded it. Gilbert's protests

Body Located in Willamette River

Portland — (UPI) — Police said Tuesday a body found floating in the Willamette river June 28 might be that of a man wanted for questioning in connection with the slaying of his wife last January.

Detectives said the body may be that of Phelix N. Joiner, 36, a foundry worker, who was not located after the body of his wife, Elizabeth, 33, was found in their car Jan. 15. The woman had been slashed with a knife.

The coroner's office said the body had a tattoo on one arm with the initials "PNJ."

The body was found near the Globe dock.
