Colored Highways She'll Love It Made of Plastic Seen for Future

Linden, N.J. - (Science Service) - A truly bright day for motorists is foreseen in the near future, when colored highways may replace the monotonous grays and blacks that are traveled today.

Thermoplastics, made from petroleum gases and mixed with an aggregate such as rock or sand, can be produced in any color. The mixture is rolled and applied as a one-inch surface on pavement already laid. The colors are expected to make it easier to follow highway routes. Colored curbing also is planned to clearly define road boundaries to lessen the danger of running off on a soft shoulder, and to warn of intersections and other danger spots.

Tests Under Way

Tests on the newly-developed materials, which employ the highly-versatile plastics, polypropylene, polyethylene and polyisobutylene, are under way at the research center here of the Esso Research and Engineering Co., and are almost ready for full-scale experiments on heavily traveled highways and on airport landing areas.

The colored road coverings are expected to prove of great importance to aviation, as they not only identify different landing strips but will serve as a guide to private pilots who follow familiar landmarks, such as highways.

Resistance to oil is expected to make the new plastic material valuable to fueling and repair areas of airports, garages, gasoline service stations and other operations where oil-soaked surfaces are potentially dangerous.

Endures Pressure

In painstaking experiments, the paving materials were subjected to the Marshall stability test, where core-like samples were placed in a testing machine under 140 degrees Fahrenheit temperature and tested under various pressures, measured in pounds. For light or medium applications 500 pounds pressure is used; for heavy use, 750, for very heavy use, 1,000 and for airport applications, 1,800 pounds.

New formulations have reached stabilities from two to three times higher than these standards.

Under the Marshall test, a 1,000-pound rating equals from 100 to 120 pounds per square inch. A 20-ton truck exerts pressure of about 70 pounds per square inch.

Current needs for medical and psychiatric social workers total about 3,800 annually in the United States.

Soda For Cars
New York - (UPI) - Car care can use a familiar household product, soda bicarbonate, or baking soda. A soda-water solution quickly emulsifies road grease that catches and holds dust on windshield, wipers, chrome grill, bumpers and trim. A solution of 1/4 pound of soda to each quart of water also can be used to clean corroded battery and cable terminals. After dirt is brushed off, the solution should be brushed on terminals, frame, battery case and ground strap.
