Fantastic Facts About Little Creatures

Even a casual delving into the lives of little creatures reveals some startling facts that are downright fantastic. What could apply be called "misplacement" occur frequently in many common animals, whereby various common organs are found in ridiculous locations.

No Taste Buds

The larvae of many leaf eating insects have no taste buds, not even in the feet. They do not have to have them; they can't taste a thing and they really don't need to, as their mother selected the type of plant on which to deposit her eggs, that would be agreeable to the young when they hatch.

Wasp's Peculiarities

Ridiculous, too, are the grotesque facts regarding some species of wasps that must have special varieties of insects upon which to deposit their eggs. A female wasp, ready to lay her eggs, hunts for the proper host. If she waits too long the eggs hatch with in her body and the young wasp larvae will eat their own mother from the inside.

The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez, Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Clinic

A Low Blood Sugar

People keep writing me saying that their old family doctor is sure that all they have is "nerves," but a new and rather faddy doctor who has come to the town finds that practically all of his patients have a low blood sugar.

When my correspondents were given this diagnosis they were thrilled, and expected soon to be cured. But now they write to say that on the doctor's weird diet, they are no better. What now should they do?

All I can say is that in the course of the last 35 years or so, I have seen any number of people with this diagnosis, but in every case when I sent the patient for several estimates of blood sugar—all made by excellent chemists—the reports came back "normal."
