Transfusion From Placenta Saves Newborn Twin

Chicago – (Science Service) – The survival chances for a small, weak child in a twin birth can be greatly increased simply by holding him a few inches below the level of the delivery table.

This modified delivery technique, advanced by Dr. Melvyn Berlind, chief of obstetrics and gynecology at Unity hospital, Brooklyn, may sound like a superstitious old-wives' tale, but it is really a means by which the twins' common placenta, or afterbirth, gives the small baby a blood transfusion.

During birth, Dr. Berlind states, the umbilical cord usually is clamped and cut immediately and the baby is handed to the nurse. In the case of twins, the obstetrician clamps and cuts the cord of the first born even more rapidly than usual in the rush to deliver the second.

Depends on Blood

The small twin's survival chances depend heavily on giving it as much blood as possible at the time of delivery, Dr. Berlind believes. He suggests that if the first baby is small – two to four pounds – it should be held eight to ten inches below the level of the uterus and placenta immediately after delivery and left there until pulsations in the cord stop. During this time the lightweight newborn will receive by gravity a third of a pint of blood.

If a large, strong twin comes first, its cord should be clamped immediately so the twin still in the womb can receive the extra blood, in case this second twin is small.

If both twins are large and healthy, their chances are good in the beginning. When both are small, Dr. Berlind asserts in the Journal of the International College of Surgeons, there is now a chance that at least one will live. Before, both might have died.

Pigs Ruled Part Of Agriculture

Salem (UPI) – Attorney General Robert Y. Thornton said Wednesday that pigs are a part of agriculture whether they live in a "piggery" or forage on grazing land.

His opinion said that in view of this, the land on which they are raised does not come under county zoning ordinances.

The attorney general said the Legislature has not actually defined agriculture but for the purpose of the special question raised about pigs, the answer is in a revised Oregon statute which says that no county zoning restriction shall "regulate lands used for grazing, agriculture, horticulture or for the growing of timber."

CAUGHT WITH GOODS

Stockton, Calif. (UPI) – Thomas C. Wilson, 31, was arrested seven minutes after he robbed the Hunter Square branch of the Bank of America of $759 Wednesday when police spotted him entering a nearby Skid Row hotel with both hands full of money.

Strong Case for Catholics Seen In Birth Control

New York (UPI) – A Roman Catholic scholar concludes after a study of birth control that there is a strong case for the abandonment of Catholic efforts to seek laws banning contraception.

Norman St. John-Stevas, in a study financed by the Ford Fund for the Republic and the Study of Democratic Institutions, said that Roman Catholics in a democracy have every right to work for laws banning the sale and distribution of Contraceptives.

Might Limit Efforts

But he added that they might better limit their efforts to securing a policy of "state neutrality" on the issue and passage of laws preserving public morality commanding the general support of the whole community.

St. John-Stevas is an English lawyer and journalist. He is a former fellow at the Yale university law school and the author of several books.

In his report on "Birth Control and Public Policy," he said that a law such as that in Connecticut forbidding use of contraceptives is a violation of Catholic principles of jurisprudence, and is unenforceable.

Private Act

"Using a contraceptive is essentially a private act, and though it may have harmful social consequences it is impossible to isolate any particular act and demonstrate that harmful consequences flow from it. In practices such a law is obviously unenforceable, and the attempt to enforce it would involve an intolerable interference with the private life of individuals."

He said the state laws have almost no effect. Even in Connecticut, he said, the law is violated constantly.

Subcommittee Urges Work on B-70 Bomber

Washington (UPI)–The Senate preparedness subcommittee, headed by Democratic leader Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas, has urged the administration speed development of the supersonic B-70 bomber.

Johnson and his Senate colleagues said the long-range aircraft was urgently needed for American defense despite great advances in rockets and missiles.

Must Go Forward

Johnson stressed that the subcommittee was not advocating a de-emphasis on missile development. "These are vital programs which must go forward," he said.

But he warned that unless an operational supersonic bomber is developed now, there will be no replacement for the B-52 when it becomes obsolete in the mid-1960s.

President Eisenhower has asked Congress for 75 million dollars to produce research prototypes of the big plans. But Congress gave him an additional 290 million dollars and called for faster development.

Johnson said in a subcommittee report issued today that the nation must have more modern manned weapons as well as missiles.

New Tree Planting Should Be Planned

Owners of forest property in Jackson county should begin now to make plans for any planting of tree seedlings they expect to do this fall and winter, according to Farm Forester Jim Fisher.

Technical forestry assistance is available to interested persons without cost under the Oregon State forestry department's farm forestry program.

Tree order blanks will not be available until this fall, according to the forester, but it is wise to make plans ahead as to species to plant, the number to plant, and the selection of the planting area. In some cases, preparation of the planting site or removal of brush and other competitive vegetation may be necessary before planting can be done. This work would be accomplished this summer prior to the planting season.

Additional information may be obtained from the farm forester at his office at the Table Rock rd. headquarters of the state forestry department or by calling NOrmandy 4-1213.

Four per cent of the nation's families have an annual income of $1,000 to $1,499.
