Men's Shoes Reported With Pointed Toes, Higher Heels

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor
New York — The pointed toes and higher heels no longer are the sole property of the women. They're catching on in the men's shoes.
Boot and Shoe Recorder, a trade publication, reported that nearly every men's line at the semi-annual popular price shoe show had "more than just a sampling" of the extremely pointed or "misile" toes to offer buyers.
"The same displays were heavy with other narrow, slim and pointed shoes a little less drastic in design," said the publication.
"There also was increasing interest in a higher heel, 8-8 or 9-8."
But the heel hardly puts the men in spikes. Each eighth represents one eighth of an inch, so the highest would be one and one eighth inches. Standard heel on men's shoes is five eighths.
New for small boys who take to puddles like a duck is a leather chukka boot, made waterproof by a new tanning process called secotan.
The process first was developed to give extra protection to footwear for sportsmen and plant workers. Leather Industries of America said the process leaves a shoe light and supple as elastic, although water-shedding. The manufacturer Michimoc using the new type of leather for children's wear has styled the boots ankle high with a high-placed tongue for the laced front.
So many of the fashions of the 1960's hearken to the 1930's and '20's it is no surprise to find the shingle bob and curling iron again on the scene.
One chain of salons Charles of the Ritz uses the curling irons to give "shadow" waves or slight dips to new, short coiffures. But none of the deep crimp or marcel waving like the marcel of old, say the stylists.
And the shingle isn't the manish trim of earlier years. The hair ends in a soft cling at the nape of the neck. Some of the shingle styles have Dutch boy bangs.
It's a dull timepiece which does nothing more than keep time. The newest styles from Switzerland's watchmakers light up, alarm musically, or adjust to the jet age flight across time zones with the push of a button.

One manufacturer who for several years has made a man's light-up wrist watch this year produced one for women. The watch is suggested for finding keyholes in the dark, searching the labyrinth of a purse, or reading theater programs. The tiny battery which produces the light power can be recharged by removing and plugging into the nearest electrical socket.
The alarm clocks which sound soothing music, mostly traditional tunes, instead of the traditional jangle, are suggested for travel because of their capsule size. Each is about the size of a filter cigarette.
The jet age watch moves ahead one hour with the push of a button; back one hour by pushing a second. Another, designed for airlines stewardesses, gives the date and time in any two zones simultaneously.
Watches for the purse swivel out of leather carrying cases.
Case designs included an hour glass, made to hang from a charm bracelet; leaf and floral motifs; a gold fan tipped with diamonds; the four-leaf clover, and a gold clamshell.
The family viewed the recent Water Pageant in Bend, then traveled to Portland and points on the coast including Waldport.
In Roseburg, the family visited Mrs. Hercher's mother, Mrs. Paul Helweg, and Mr. Hercher's mother, Mrs. Walter Hercher.
