Small Worlds Around Us

Population Explosion? Consider the Aphids. Saying "the population is exploding" becomes meaningless when applied to the aphids.

These tiny, green bugs, about one-thirtieth of an inch long, prefer the tender shoots of plants or plant stems.

The grape vineyards of France were constantly and completely killed by heavy infestations of plant lice at various times.

The aphid's greatest enemy is the ladybug beetle. This little bug with the polka-dot spots consumes great numbers of plant lice and has, in many instances, saved orchards and vineyards from complete destruction by aphids.

Texans Welcome LBJ Back Home

Stonewall, Tex.—UPI—A western band played "The Eyes of Texas Are Upon You" as some 500 Texas hill country friends welcomed Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson and his family home Saturday night from the Los Angeles Democratic convention.

"We still say LBJ all the way," chanted the welcoming party as a chartered airplane carrying the vice presidential nominee and his family landed at Johnson's lighted private air-strip just behind his ranch house.

But Johnson, 51, dressed in a dark blue suit and light-striped tie, appeared solemn. "There have been a lot of changes made since I left here," he said. "In the first place—ah, second place," he added as the crowd roared.

The Medical Roundup

On Being Scared to Death. I have for long been convinced that many of those few persons who die on an operating table—often after only a whiff of anesthesia, and sometimes even before the anesthesia was started—die of fright.

Dr. Alvarez, a young man, helped my father with minor operations for which we gave the patient a little chloroform. What impressed me was that on the few occasions when our patient was a "sad-sack," who said he'd never survive the operation, he quit breathing shortly after I started the anesthetic.

And then only with great effort did my father and I keep him from dying as he had promised to do. After a few such experiences, I told my father I never again wanted to give an anesthetic to anyone who said he was going to die.

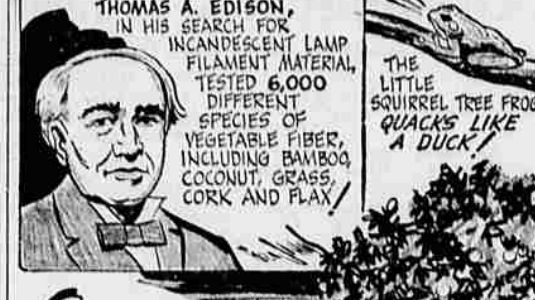

The important things for a woman to do are to remember that millions of women have lived through this trying time of nerves, flushes, depression and readjustment to life.

McMinville — UPB — Two women and one man were killed in a head-on collision early Saturday evening about four miles west of here on Highway 18.
