The Family Council

Editors Note: The Family Council consists of a Judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Mrs. L. F. — She isn't smart to turn down a rich young man.

Susan F. — But I'm not comfortable with him.

Mrs. L. F. — My 20-year-old daughter, Susan, is a sweet and beautiful girl, but I'm afraid she doesn't have very much sense.

She is extremely popular and during the past year has won the love of a most desirable young man. Peter is the son of a professional man, and he is now finishing graduate work and will enter his father's profession. He is good looking and a real gentleman.

Peter can give Susan so much comfort, but she says she isn't interested. She is fond of a very poor boy, Leonard is a nice fellow, I agree, but life will be a struggle with him. He has no special trade and no business head.

Susan F. — I can't be like my parents, just thinking about money and comforts. Love is much more important. My mother says you can love a rich man just as easily, maybe more so, as a poor one, but it doesn't work that way for me.

Peter is very nice, I'll agree, but I don't feel as happy when I'm with him as with Leonard. I didn't go to college and he often talks over my head. Nearly all of his friends went to college, too, and it's a little embarrassing when they discuss things I know nothing about.

My mother has all sorts of dreams of glory for me, but I'm a down-to-earth girl and I want to be happy with the one I love.

The Council: When a girl turns down a rich man to marry a poor one, it is assumed by cynics that she's a fool and by romantics that love has triumphed. Yet neither is necessarily true.

The fact is that being wealthy or moving in "high society" is frightening to many young women. They feel they may not be able to keep up socially with other women in their new set and this makes them insecure in their married life. If there is a difference in educational background, this fear is naturally intensified.

When she gets older and gains more confidence, a woman usually recognizes that it takes little more than common sense and a kindly nature to move comfortably in any social group. She can always make up her educational deficiencies if she is willing to put forth a little effort to learn.

The prize example of a young woman with the self-confidence to enter a social circle far removed from the one into which she was born is the Norwegian fisherman's daughter, Anne Marie Easmussen, who married into the Rockefeller family. Undoubtedly, young Rockefeller sensed that this girl of humble background and modest educational attainments could be happy with his family and friends because she was not handicapped by fear. Without this handicap she will be able to learn whatever she finds desirable.

As for Susan, we don't think she ought to be too hasty in her decision. If she dislikes Peter for reasons of personality or character, of course she is right to turn him down. But if she is rejecting him out of fear, she may be making a mistake.

In any case, Mrs. L. F. should not apply pressure. It is essential that Susan make this decision out of her own mind and feelings. If she doesn't, the marriage doesn't have a good chance of success — no matter how much money is involved.

1960's May Bring End to Outdated Demonstrations

Chicago (UPI)—Let there be a din of bells, a parade of standards, disorder in the aisles and general rejoicing.

For the 1960's may see the demise of the demonstration, that idiot child of America's rowdy political past which long since should have gone the way of duelling at dawn and the torchlight parade.

Indeed, the Republican National Convention starting next Monday may be the last at which the demonstration is permitted to rear its many, many screaming heads at a party convalesce convened for the serious purpose of formulating policy and nominating candidates for president and vice president.

In that event many Americans will not be sorry. What ever else television has done to or for society, it has established that the latter-day demonstration is artificial and phony.

It is a living fossil consisting of bogus bedlam, carefully contrived chaos, cultivated confusion, and deliberate disorder no more spontaneous in conception than royal matchmaking at the turn of the century.

And if some members of the GOP convention arrangements committee had their way, there wouldn't be any demonstrations at this year's Republican meeting.

Jaren L. Jones, vice chairman of the arrangements committee, said considerable sentiment developed at a two-hour meeting Wednesday to abolish the demonstration here and now.

But it is hard to break with the past, as witness the Society for the Preservation of Barbershop Quartet Singing. And some people die a little whenever anything becomes extinct, as witness all those who regret the passing of the dodo.

So the Republicans decided not to abolish demonstrations but to limit them to 10 minutes each for "serious" contenders for the presidential and vice presidential nominations. No nonsense, the committee ruled, for "insincere favorite son" blowoffs.

Jones said the Republicans were moved by thousands of letters, telegrams, and telephone calls they got from citizens criticizing the televised demonstrations put on by the Democrats at their national convention in Los Angeles last week.

Jones said they "were very disenchanted with what they saw."

Tooze Resigns As GOP Delegate

Portland (UPI)—Walter L. Tooze Jr. announced Wednesday that he will resign as a delegate to the Republican National convention.

Tooze, who has been confined to the Physicians and Surgeon hospital in Portland, requested Gov. Mark Hatfield to name his alternate, Harriet Krause of Portland in his place.

Tooze said, however, that he does not expect his illness to prevent him from campaigning for the senate.

According to Tooze the 1960 GOP convention will mark the first time since 1900 that his family name has not been represented as a delegate.
