Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

A MISSIONARY, writes J. Arthur Spring, came home from the fields for a vacation and was invited to dinner by the congregation's richest widow. Later he told his wife, "The other ladies present really amazed me. Some to my certain knowledge wore a church, 40 portable organs and 20 libraries."

In his longing to provide the gospel for his aboriginal flock, the earnest missionary could not refrain from estimating the silks, jewelry and furs of the guests at the dinner in terms of his people's needs.

One day in the 1670's, the then Earl of Dorset happened to pick up a copy of a recently published book at his favorite bookseller. "I was surprised," he noted in his diary, "with some passages I struck upon dipping here and there, and bought it. My bookseller begged me to speak in its favor if I liked it, for copies lay on his hands as waste paper."

The book was Milton's PARADISE LOST.
