Largest Electrical Company Learns How to Get Missile, Space Vehicle Business

By ELMER C. WALZER, UPI Financial Editor. New York - (AP) - General Electric Company, nation's largest electrical equipment company, has discovered how to get the missile and space vehicle business. The method is as simple as A B C. You keep the costs down by ever increasing vigilance and research. That vigilance has saved the United States government $7,540,000 in 1959, $5.6 million in 1958, and bids fair to run to more than $6 million in 1960, according to G. H. Jacobsen, cost improvement specialist for GE's missile and space vehicle department. The very start, must seek out less expensive ways of doing a job, otherwise proposals become mere choice of alternate courses of action. Deliberate initiative effort must be invested - the idea may be originated or implemented by both. Measurable savings must be produced. The proposal must be in effect during the current calendar year, unless additional time is needed to prove out ideas or collect savings costs. In the course of the research of cutting costs in this department, GE gives its experts tokens awards for top performance, such as lighters, electric clocks, and the like, but more importantly it records their successes in the records which are used in connection with promotions, transfers, and salary reviews. The idea is to imbue the researchers with the importance of keeping costs down and quality up.

That $6 million saving for 1960 is an estimate. It could be far from the mark. In 1959, the target was $5,260,000 and the actual saving was $7,540,000. Hence this year's cost reach above the $8 million mark. Doesn't sound like much in these days of billions for this and for that. But it's considered very significant in a highly competitive business where there is no benefit of assembly lines - and every job is different from the one before. Three Types of Saving. Jacobsen explained that a things are moving a bit slower this year because the department has received a tremendous amount of new business, and he said that it would be a little while before the men could become familiar enough with the new techniques to begin to take advantage of cost improvements. General Electric some time ago concluded that the only way to get the space vehicle business was to keep the costs down, so it set about to research the best methods to do just that. GE's work for the government is on a cost plus fee and a cost plus incentive basis. It produces missile nose cones, space vehicles and other hardware. "Cost improvement, rather than merely reduction, is the basic aim of GE's missile and space vehicle department," says Jacobsen. "We recognize three types of savings attained in cost improvement - cost reduction - continuing to do something, but at less cost; cost elimination - ceasing to do something which was being done; and cost avoidance - not doing something that was going to be done. "Cost improvements wins us contracts by enabling us to bill lower than anticipated costs."

Basic Ground Rules. General Electric's cost improvement program is based on four basic ground rules: A change of results in reduction of a previously accepted cost proposal, at Pearson Takes Over As Acting Governor. Salem - (AP) - Senate President Walter J. Pearson (D-Portland) took over today as acting governor for a week. He will serve until Gov. Mark Hatfield returns the end of this week from Republican National Convention and the Seattle Seafair celebration.

Benson, Ariz. - Members of a small religious sect who believe the U. S. will be struck by a nuclear attack started their fourth week today hidden in bomb shelters.
