

Women Good Politicians Says GOP Vice-Chairman

By MARCIA MILANOWSKI
United Press International
Chicago — (UPI) — To direct women's activities the Republicans chose a woman and Mrs. Clare Williams, the party's choice, said today women are good politicians.

Mrs. Williams is tall, attractive and poised. Her job is to sell Republicanism and she's convinced it's the best product anywhere.

Mrs. Williams, who addressed the Republican National convention in Chicago Monday night, is the nation's top Republican woman. She's assistant chairman of the Republican National committee and director of the woman's division at the conclave.

Clare Williams is especially proud of the part women are playing in today's politics. "Women are good on details," she said, "and it's one of the reasons they're good politicians."

Up The Ladder
Judging from Mrs. Williams' accomplishments, one would be inclined to agree. The energetic woman from St. Petersburg, Fla., has come up the political ladder rung by rung both in the national Republican party organization and in Republican Women's club work.

She started out in her political career as a teenager driving voters to the polls. In 1954, she was elected Florida state committeewoman for Pinellas County and two years later was endorsed for the state post of Republican national committeewoman. She won reelection to the post this year without opposition.

Mrs. Williams was born in Syracuse, N. Y., the daughter of a dairy executive. She says she first became interested in politics when she was a young girl listening to family discussions across the dinner table.

Woman Vice President?
A graduate of the University of Syracuse, she retired from her various careers as teacher and merchandising executive when she married the late Frank Williams, a St. Louis attorney.

Mrs. Williams has little doubt that Vice-President Nixon will sweep the country in the November election. She believes American women will support the Republican ticket as they did in 1956 "because they're interested in Republican issues and what Republicanism has to offer."

Dior's Collection Said Wearable

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

New York (UPI) — The House of Christian Dior traditionally sets off its fashion salons in Paris instead of New York.

It keeps to tradition for fall. The New York collection show Friday was more wearable than startling, and right in tune with what most other American designers did for the coming season. Namely, dropped the waistline.

If the firm plans any new silhouette to rock the fashion world, we will learn about it July 27, when the Paris collection is shown reporters.

Yves St. Laurent, the slightly built, bespectacled young designer who succeeded the late Dior, called the look of his New York collection "soignée." Dior collections have had "looks" just about every season since the revolutionary "new look" of 1947, which hauled hemlines to a postwar low.

Suit jackets were longer than last season, ranging from mid-hip to wristbone. These had "implied" fit, skimming the figure in front, falling straight at the back.

Has Decanter Shape
The longer torso, or dropped waist, theme ran through the collection.

Afternoon dresses nonchalantly skimmed the torso to the hipbone and from there, swung out with fine gathers, and then narrowed again at the hemline to give what the firm called, "a charming decanter shape."

Some costumes were unbelted. Others were belted loosely at the upper hipbone. Shoulders got the rounded or dolman treatment in many suits and coats. Collars were constructed in many cases to stand away from the neckline. Some costumes were collarless. Sleeve lengths ranged from the elbow to the midforearm. Suit skirts were slim, but some had hip yokes and slight gathers falling from the yoke to give walking ease.

St. Laurent introduced the lantern silhouette for several coats — a sort of triangle with narrow shoulders and controlled fullness graduating toward the hemline.

Designer Stars
Mollie Parnis, one of Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower's favorite designers, produced some of the most becoming clothes in the showings Friday — last day of the couture group's semi-annual press week.

One dropped waistline silhouette was reminiscent of the clothes worn by the small boy in the Buster Brown shoe advertisements. It consisted of boxy overblouse with self-belt at the hip, and slim skirt.

Sleeves on the Buster Browns were three-quarter length, and collars were set off with big taffeta bows at the front.

Miss Parnis showed another sleeve shape which she called the stovetop — a rounded shape set in a dropped shoulder. Several after-five dresses came with apron fronts.

Woman Heads Texas Medical Association

Fort Worth, Texas — (UPI) — Dr. May Owen, chief pathologist for Terrell Laboratories, is the first woman to become president of the Texas Medical association.

A white-haired career woman, Dr. Owen holds degrees from Texas Christian university and the Louisville Medical school.

An honorary degree was in recognition of her discovery that a powder once used on surgical gloves was causing infections when it fell into an incision. Dr. Owen's research resulted in the development of a new, safe absorbent powder.

She was born on a Falls County, Texas, farm before the turn of the century, one of seven children. Dr. Owen developed an interest in medicine as a child, and went on to study at TCU and Louisville, and to do graduate work at the Mayo clinic and Bellevue hospital, New York.

Dr. Owen returned to her native state in 1928 to work as a pathologist at Fort Worth's Terrell Laboratories. In 1951, she was named one of the outstanding women of Texas.

Her devotion to medical service was recognized again in 1951 when fellow doctors gave her a "gold headed cane," symbolic of service to the medical profession.

Medford Woman Has Report on Veep's Music

Mrs. Eve Prentice of Medford was a spectator at a recording session during which the official music for the entrance of Vice-President Richard Nixon at the Republican national convention was recorded.

Mrs. Prentice's nephew, Don Butterfield, was one of 21 well known musicians in New York City chosen to make the recording. Mrs. Prentice reported from New York today. The music was recorded in a studio of the Faillace Productions, Inc.

"Twenty-one top musicians from New York City, including my nephew Don Butterfield, were chosen for this recording," the Medford woman wrote. "It was most interesting to see and hear how this was done. There was one and one-half hours of rehearsal for a number that is only one minute and 28 seconds long. This was necessary to get exactly the right tonal balance and spirit to the performance."

The music was arranged and conducted by Bob Haggart and produced by Faillace Productions, Inc. Mr. Faillace was very kind in showing me through the studio and explaining the recording techniques.

It is planned that the introduction of the Vice-President will be Wednesday, and millions of U.S. residents will be watching and listening on radio and television.

Parisian Fashion Shows Open; Hemlines Lowered

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

Paris (UPI) — We women no sooner get our hemlines all taken up than, whoops, Paris hauls 'em down again. And just about the time we get our psyches adjusted to the rush of the 1960's, Paris pushes us back into the leisurely pace of the 1930's.

Fickle fashion, in other words, is at it again off on a new cycle which this year means a lot of return to the old.

So look for skirts one to two inches longer than last year and to the revival of the sleek, straight hairdos, the hair-covering hats, the wrap-around coats, and the loosely-filled silhouette of the pre-World War II days when Carole Lombard instead of Brigitte Bardot was setting styles.

These were among the fall and winter fashion trends which developed Monday, opening day of a week-long series of shows by members of the Chambre Syndicale de la Couture Parisienne—Union of Parisian Dress Designers.

Drops Hemlines Two Inches
Scheduled today: A batch of old-timers in this big business of women's wear, Pierre Balmain, Jacques Heim, president of the Chambre, Nina Ricci, and Gros.

Designer Pierre Cardin, who once was with the House of Christian Dior, was Monday's strongest exponent of the longer skirts and the return to an era which many of you reading this are too young to remember.

Cardin dropped hemlines about two inches from last year's level so the knee-cap is amply covered. Jacques Griffe and Jean Patou were more cautious, lowering them one-half to one inch.

Shoulders were natural. Dresses and suits with hipbone length jackets skimmed over the body lightly, never hugging too closely. Waistlines were not sharply defined, but indicated with scallop insets or intricate seaming.

Continue Slim Skirt
Most daytime costumes of the new season continued the slim skirt. But watch for gentle flare here and there.

Both Cardin and Patou featured the wrap-around look for fall. Several of the Cardin coats not only had to be clutched together at the front to keep out winter breezes, but also had huge, fur-trimmed collars wrapped high.

and close about the neck. Patou's head designer, German-born Roland Karl, carried the wrap-around theme right from suits through into day and formal clothes. Favorite technique was the wrap-over skirt, with one layer of fabric over laying another smoothly.

Touches of the 1930's showed at Jacques Griffe's also. Lines of the costume followed the body naturally, the firm said, obeying what the texture of the fabric itself demanded.
