water is essentially the same in both countries, he said, except that Koreans use flouride in their water where many U.S. cities do not. Chung was asked what he thought the main problem in Korea is today.

He answered that there are many problems, but the overriding one is the desire for reunification of the country.

Creates Many Problems
Having the country split into two hostile governments has created many problems for both sides, he said.

Prior to division of the country, into the communist and democratic camps, the south half was the agricultural center and the north half was the industrial center.

Since division, South Korea has had to develop its own industry, which has resulted in many problems.

Another problem is that South Korea has had to absorb a large amount of refugees from the Communist terror, he said. Before division, the northern part of Korea had the larger population, but since, the balance has shifted so that South Korea now has a population of 20 million and North Korea 9 million.

Express Confidence
Although the three Koreans have not been in their homeland since the recent student uprising which caused the resignation of the Syngman Rhee regime, they all expressed their complete confidence that the change of government will be good for the country.

The Korean people are looking forward optimistically to the new election, Chung said. The opportunity to again choose their own leaders in free elections has instilled new confidence in the Korean people, he said.

It is Chung's opinion that the students led the recent demonstrations against the Rhee government, because they are the only group in Korea that is not afraid to take positive action. Although the older population in Korea was dissatisfied with the Rhee government they were hesitant to take any action against it, he said.

Receive Support
Chung pointed out, however, that although the students led the anti-government demonstrations, they would never have succeeded if it were not the support of the rest of the population.

Chung feels that the students have now gotten what they were after in the resignation of the Rhee government and the prospect of new and free elections.

The three men have obviously been enjoying their stay in this country, but they are also anxious to return to their homeland and begin applying some of the new techniques and methods that they have learned here.

The Family Council

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a Judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a woman's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Henry R.—I don't want to tell Mother. Ina R.—The news should come from us.

Henry R.—My wife and I have recently agreed upon a divorce after four rocky years of marriage. We have no children so there really should be no serious problems.

My wife, however, is making a big problem by insisting upon telling my Mother about our breakup. My mother is elderly and has been quite ill recently. This is going to upset her terribly. If anything happens to mother as a result of this news, I would hold Ina responsible.

I have given in to Ina in many ways. It's she who wants the divorce, but I don't want her going to my mother with a long list of complaints and grievances against me.

Ina R.—I don't think secrets like this can be kept, certainly not for long. Somebody will let the cat out of the bag. The news ought to come from us.

My aim is not to present a list of grievances. I simply want to be honest. My mother-in-law has been very nice to me and is fond of me. I don't want sympathy, but I would like her to understand that our marriage can't work.

I have visited my mother-in-law with and without Henry several times in the last few months and I think she already suspects the truth. Surely it isn't the best thing for her health to have all this uncertainty.

The Council: It is typical of men and women who are emotionally undeveloped and excessively dependent upon parents to take the attitude that various actions of theirs would be a death blow to one or both parents.

Men and women of this type are naturally "ashamed" to admit their childish fear of punishment or disapproval from a parent and rationalize their position by taking on the role of protector of their parents.

The mature individual who makes a rational decision is usually able to present his case in a way that makes sense to his parents. The parents may still disagree, and even suffer great anxiety about the course the son or daughter has chosen, but they recognize and accept the fact that their child must find his path in life. The parent who cannot accept this has, indeed, a destructive hold on the child's life.

Henry's statement is riddled with the fear of a guilty little boy. He seems to take the attitude that his wife is a school-teacher and is going to report his failures to his mother. We suspect that he has a very strong sense of shame about his failure as a husband. The fact that he is willing to go along with the divorce simply because his wife wants it, apparently making no effort to save the marriage, indicates a lack of ordinary backbone.

Ina, on the other hand, seems to be holding this issue like a weapon over her husband's head. Possibly she still hopes to goad him into some many action, or perhaps she wants to hit back at him for real or imagined hurts. We suspect that she is digging at this vulnerable point more than is necessary.

The mother in the case probably suspects the essential truth: that these partners have shared little love and have had no deep experience in their marriage. Her reaction, if told about their plans, would probably be to urge them to try harder to make something good of their relationship. We think they should make this attempt without bringing their woes to her.

U.S. Development Loans Help Low Income Families Construct Homes in Peru

By HENRY MINARD
United Press International
Lima, Peru.—(UPI)—This Latin laborator, of experiments, ideas and hopes is drawing increasing interest from the United States.

Earlier this month, $2 million in U.S. government "seed capital" was put at the disposal of Peruvian savings and loan associations to improve lower and lower-middle class housing.

The step was historic. "This is the first time the United States government has extended credit to a foreign, private home-financing institution anywhere . . . in the world," said Vance Brand, managing director of the U.S. Development Loan Fund.

Not for Wealthy
It was the first gesture in President Eisenhower's program for expanded aid to Latin America.

Under the financing, Peruvians will be able to obtain low-interest loans for construction of medium and low-cost private dwellings.

And, it has built-in guarantees that the money will be made available for lower income groups — not siphoned off into the hands of the well-to-do.

Prior to the U.S. help, Peru's housing program bogged down in prohibitive interest rates.

Brand stresses that it is only "seed capital" which the U.S. is providing. To Peruvians, he said, "the future, the financial responsibility and the final success are in your hands." And Brand has confidence in the future of Peru.

Has Many Hungry
Though Peru has begun to emerge into modern times, the hinterlands still wear the visage of 17th Century poverty and ignorance.

Most of the hungry, and there are many, don't know what Nationalism means, what Communism is or where the United States is located.

The biggest drawback to the development of Peru is the Indian. He numbers some seven million in the high Andes and in the cities.

The mountain Indians, the most underprivileged group in the world, eke out a living in the rocky area, subsisting on less than 2,000 calories a day. Their coastal brothers, more "privileged," earn 50 cents a day when they can find work.

Those who drifted to the cities live for the most part in squalor, earning what they can.

Peruvian development, though slower than canyons being grooved by nature, is imperceptibly changing the face of the nation's economy.

As the wealthy gradually recognize the democratic way, and invest in their homeland instead of hoarding their riches in Swiss banks, the nation will some day achieve the evolution of a healthy, democratic and well-fed land.
