They'll Do It Every Time — By Jimmy Hatlo

Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins

They are strange little creatures, the harvestmen. They are "the little old men" of the garden and the pasture and belong to a peculiar class of animals known as the "arachnids."

There are some peculiar characters in this group – the scorpions, ticks and spiders. Those of us who would not know the harvestmen as "little old men" would recognize them as "daddy longlegs."

The harvestman is spider-like in appearance and relationship, with a body about the size of an aspirin tablet and suspended among eight long legs. With its two fore-legs, the little creature is always and forever pointing out something that seems invisible to anyone else. Or perhaps, in pantomime, the daddy longlegs is indicating to others of his kind – those that understand his sign language –that something or other of importance is "over there."

Point Out Cows

Some farm boys used to have the idea the harvestman would indicate, by pointing its forelegs, the direction to take to find the cattle in the "back forty." Some always consulted the nearest daddy longlegs before they started out looking for the cattle. The harvestman would rare back on its six rear legs and point with the two forward ones.

These "little old men" usually were plentiful during the late summer, and probably for that reason were called "harvestmen." The farm boys of course called it an insect or a long-legged spider, which was a little closer to the true facts.

The harvestman is really long-legged; the legs are all out of proportion to the size of the creature. When in motion the harvestman's knees are working high overhead. Suspended in the center of the legs is the small, seed-shaped gray body. The legs are actually "seven league boots," allowing the little fellow to make amazing speed and to perform "tight-rope walking" and other acrobatics that would make a human aerialist green with envy.

Hunts at Night

Children have always affectionately called the little guy "daddy gray beard." Spider-like, the daddy longlegs hunts mostly at night, feeding on plant lice and scale insects. Probably its only protection as the eight legs; their great length keeps the soft body out of harm's way. However, these legs are a little difficult to manage, as their excessive length causes them to become entangled in every spider web, and then the spider eats "the harvestman."

The joints in the legs of daddy longlegs are miracles of perfection. "Cuter than a bug's ear" falls short when describing anything as delicate. Imagine a "knee-cap" in a leg joint smaller than a human hair; yet they work with a quiet, efficient smoothness.

There are usually many of these "little old men" in every garden and every pasture, alongside the road and in every vacant lot. Watch them quietly sitting on a plant stem with their slender forelegs waving gently in one or more directions, trying to tell themselves – or whoever will look –that there is something really important going on "over there."

Writer Happy About Farthing's Passing

London – (UPI) – Early reaction to the death of the English farthing came today in a letter to the Daily Telegraph.

"It's withdrawal from our coinage is long overdue, as for many years it has outlived its usefulness.

"I trust that MY passing will be long delayed. Yours faithfully, C. Farthing."
