Writer Takes 'Scientific Sampling' At Crater Lake

By A. ROBERT SMITH
Mail Tribune Washington Correspondent

(Editor's note: Our Washington correspondent is browsing around Oregon. From Crater Lake he has sent off a note to Congressman Charles O. Porter, advocate of the controversial proposal to take tourists down to the edge of Crater Lake.)

Crater Lake - Dear Charlie: I've just taken a scientific sampling, as the pollsters always describe it, of public opinion on the burning issue of that aerial gondola you have been urging to be built here to take visitors to the edge of the lake.

Everyone included in this scientific sampling was strongly for it. They weren't passive about it either. Some raised their fists aloft, ready to take up arms for the cause.

"Damn the conservationists and full speed ahead," cried a crusty campaigner, waving his left crutch like a sword at an imagined adversary.

These members of the public were scientifically chosen. I stood at the top of the mile-long winding path which leads down to the lake. Actually, I sat on a bench. As the weary park lovers stumbled to the top, I put the question to them: "Wouldn't you like to have a chairlift built here?"

Some didn't answer. They were parched from the long climb, their tonsils coated with the dust of the trail. I tilted my canteen to their burning lips and repeated the question. The answers came thick and fast.

"Build it! Build it!" they roared in unison, from a squatting stance in the dust. I short-waved the results to Dr. Gallup.

Few Trouble-Makers There were a few obstreperous trouble-makers, of course, but there are a few in every crowd. One arrogant couple, climbing erectly like wooden soldiers, spurned my offer, and said something about not being THAT old yet.

It was plain that they were the kind that cheat by exercising regularly. Not being typical of the American norm, I eliminated them.

Then there were the Park Rangers who stood nearby hooting at your trusty pollster. Charlie, they ain't friendly.

"It WON'T be built," they bellowed, trying to tamper with public opinion.

Opinion Not Counted I didn't count their opinion either. Don't want this poll rigged. Gotta keep it objective and scientific.

Now that this poll has given you a mandate from the people to go ahead with the aerial gondola, what about a new wrinkle to get tourists over to the Island in Crater Lake?

Your idea for a monorail down to the lake came from a visit to Disneyland, as I recall. Right? Well, they've added a submarine ride at Disneyland this year that is a real crowd puller. Put a sub with port holes in Crater Lake, and stock the lake with sharks - it would be a sensation. Talk about a wilderness area; man, this would be the wildest!

But, let's face it, the garden club ladies will kick up a storm that will be hard for you to ride out. So you should keep a diversionary tactic or two in reserve.

As Bad as Freeway First, you could focus attention on the huge number of cars coming into Crater Lake park. It's getting nearly as bad as the Los Angeles freeway. Next thing you know with all these cars, Crater Lake will have a smog problem. Can't you imagine the signs along the road saying: "Cut off your motor; coast down hills to hold down smog."

Then, while the ladies are diverted by this into a full-throated outcry against automobiles, point out that Crater Lake is changing color! It is no longer as blue as it once was. It's taking on a chromolum look - reflections from

Intoxicated Man Kicks Policewoman in Head

Medford's new and only policeman, Officer Hilde Prom, started learning her duties the hard way Monday. She was involved in a fight. Officer Prom, and another officer had been summoned to the corner of Eight st. and Central ave., yesterday afternoon on a report of a drunk person in that location.

The two officers found Paul Macauley Charlton, White City, in an apparent intoxicated condition, and arrested him on a charge of drunk in public.

Charlton was placed in the patrol car, from which he allegedly made a break for freedom by trying to jump out the back door. He was put back in the patrol car and handcuffed.

At the station, Charlton reached over the back seat of the patrol car and reportedly kicked Officer Prom in the head. The blow was of sufficient force to knock Miss Macauley was again subdued and placed in jail.

Other than being a little dizzy, Officer Prom appeared none the worse for wear this morning and seemed anxious to get back on the job.

Macauley entered a plea of not guilty to a charge of resisting arrest in municipal court this morning, but Judge Alan B. Holmes found him guilty and he was sentenced to 30 days in jail.
