Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins

Do Animals Dream? Don't You?

The poet writes, "Sleep is the time to dream," and observant students have noticed that the so-called lower animals, as well as man himself, have dreams at least something very nearly like the imaginary processions of ideas that occupy the human mind during slumber or at the instant of awakening.

In man, we say dreams are often the mental fulfillment of suppressed ideas, or the reliving of some experience that left an impression on the mind when we were awake, and came back in a dream. From our human viewpoint, by which we measure every animal action, we could claim that no creature dreams, because to dream one must have imagination, and some of the wiser of us say imagination is solely a human accomplishment.

Doubt Statement

But to all those people who have owned a dog, cat, or any other animal – and who have been in rather close contact with them – doubt the statement made by the very wise. These good folks have seen their pet suddenly awake from a sound sleep trembling or cryin out, as if frightened.

We admit that an insect can't dream; when it goes to sleep, it almost dies. But not so with the higher animals. They seem to have their dreams depending on their position in the animal scale. The more highly developed the animal, the more apt it is to experience something resembling dreams. Birds seem to dream, there seems little doubt about it.

The bird that suddenly plunges into the side of its cage was frightened by something. The bird in the open that plunges into the side of a house may have been scared by some fancied experience while it slept. Pet canaries and parakeets apparently dream and at time become panic stricken trying to get away from a bad dream that seemed very real to them.

Monkeys Dream

Many monkeys seem to dream, some actually have nightmares and scream. Perhaps they imagined some terrible monster was after them, or was about to rob them of a food morsel just when he was about to pop it into his mouth. He may even have dreamed of falling from a high tree and wake up breathless, scared half to death.

All creatures of the wild, living in their natural environment, must have many terrible experiences in their day to day life and these happenings would give them cause to dream. It would seem rather silly for the most advanced thinker or scientist to contradict the possibility that animals have dreams, for the most advanced or learned of us can't come up with anything like a satisfactory explanation why man himself has dreams of what they mean or don't mean.

We are not even sure when they occur, or how long they last, or whether they are in technicolor or black and white.

Jack Doesn't Want Labor Bosses' Help

Hyannis Port, Mass. – (UPI) – Sen. John F. Kennedy, the Democratic presidential nominee, said Saturday he was happy to be without the support of labor leaders James R. Hoffa and Harry Bridges in his race for the White House.

Kennedy, in an implied dig at his Republican rival, Vice President Richard M. Nixon, spurned any idea of either seeking or accepting the endorsement of the scandal-ridden Teamsters union or the red-tinged International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's union.

Nixon was said to have talked with Jack Hall, leader of Hawaiian longshoremen and other labor elements, in Honolulu Thursday night. The union, headed by Bridges, was expelled from the CIO in 1949 as Communist dominated.

Kennedy long has been at odds with Hoffa and his Teamsters union.

"I think I can win those states (where Hoffa and Bridges are powerful) without Hall and the Teamsters," Kennedy said. "If I can't win without them, then I'm not going to win them."

The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine Mayo Clinic

How Wonderful Is A Good Heredity

Whenever in this colmun I mention a bad hereidity I get many people angry at me.

DR ALVAREZ

But, I always say to those who write to scold me, they mustn't get angry because there is such a wonderfully good side to heredity, and we can't have that good side without the other bad side. I was just reading a very interesting book, "The Gifted Group at Mid-Life" by Lewis Terman and Melita H. Oden, which describes a follow-up study to see what happened to a group of very superior children, who were studied 35 years ago.

Although there are exceptions to the rule, the typical gifted child is usually the product of superior parentage—superior not only in cultural and educational background, but apparently also in heredity. As the result of the combined influence of heredity and envioronment, such children are superior as compared with the average child in the pupulation.

The gifted child goes through school easily, and could doubtless go ahead much more rapidly if the teaching in our schools was adapted to his needs. Gifted children have many interests. They learn to read early and easily, and they love to read widely. Without any urging, they read many more books and also better books than the average child reads. Both boys and girls tend to mature so rapidly that they are two or three years ahead of the age norm. The gifted child at the age of 9 is doing things that the average child can do only after he or she is past the age of 12.

Most Do Well

In this book we learn what happened to these gifted children after they had reached maturity. Most of them have done remarkably well. More than 85 per cent entered college, and almost 70 per cent graduated. The latter figure is about 10 times as high as it is for a random group of comparable age. There were three times the usual number who received honors at graduatin. Two-thirds of them went on after college for graduate study. The Ph. D., or a comparable doctorate, was taken by 14 per cent of the men and 4 per cent of the women graduates. Only 3 per cent of average college graduates take such a doctorate.

Seven of the women are listed in "American Men of Science," and two are in "Who's Who in America." Seventy men are listed in "American Men of Science;" 10 others appear in the directory of "American Scholars," and 31 appear in "Who's Who."

Many Papers Written

These men have written nearly 2,000 scientific and technical papers and articles, and some 60 books. At least 230 patents have been granted to some of these men. A group of the men have written 33 novels and 375 short stories.

When I see how great the kifts to society these able persons have to give, I am distressed to read that each year in America a large percentage of able college students drop out and do not graduate, often because they haven't the money to carry on. Their parents cannot help them, and apparently our Government, even in the face of our great national emergency, will not always help.

Crime Group To Seek Church Help

Portland –(UPI)– The Church division of the attorney general's committee on crime prevention has voted to solicit broader support from church-affiliated groups for wider crime prevention activities.

Members of the division said, by enlarging to 15 members, the group hoped to be able to form sub-committees—which would then organize crime - prevention groups in smaller communities.

The church division named Rev. Edward E. Goetz, chaplain at MacLaren School, as chairman, and named Rabbi Jack Segal, of Congregation Neveh Zedek, as corresponding secretary. The next division meeting is scheduled for Sept. 8.
