Revised Southwest Oregon School Boundaries Approved

Salem - (UPI) - The State Board of Education has ordered new hearings on the proposed Central Oregon Area Education District and approved revised boundaries establishing a similar district in Southwest Oregon.

The Central Oregon district as proposed would include Deschutes, Jefferson and Crook counties. The board heard testimony from citizens in Jefferson and Crook counties strongly opposing the plan.

Board member Ronald Jones, Salem, made the motion to continue hearings and the vote was unanimous. He said he wants the hearings continued "for a month or so to look at the facts."

In okaying the Southwest Oregon Area Education District, the board left out Josephine county because of opposition there and altered other proposed boundaries.

As approved, the district would be comprised of all of Coos county, all of the Reedsport and Gardner school districts in Douglas county, the Florence school district in Lane county and the Port Orford-Langlois school district in Curry county.

Barring legal opposition, the Southwest Oregon plan will go on the November ballot and will be voted upon by voters within the proposed district.

Election of a five-member board of directors elected at large within the district will also be decided.

To Make Decisions

The directors will make such decisions as where to physically locate the community college, and how much of a tax levy to assess within the district.

The levy will be based on valuation of property within the boundaries.

Coos Bay is considered the most likely site for the school, which will be a post high school institution on the junior college level.

At the same time the board adopted a statement of policy relating to such districts.

It states that "a need exists for post-high school education in all areas of the state, and Oregon citizens will benefit to a greater extent if at least some of this instruction is offered in the territory in which they live."

Commuting Type

The school is to be considered primarily a "commuting type of institution" at initial formation. "Students living within approximately 50 miles can be benefited," the board said. The plan eventually could include branch facilities as needs develop and if commuting is not feasible for citizens in some of the far reaching areas of the district.

The statement said that the need for post-high school education "will increase during the immediate years beyond the capacity of the present facilities in Oregon."

"The citizens of any territory to be included in a proposed area education district should receive educational benefits that would not otherwise be available to them or be available at less cost to them than if they were required to travel outside the district to secure such education."

Annexation Easy

The board noted that the 1959 law authorizing creation of the districts makes it "relatively easy" to annex territory to a district already formed but another section of the law makes it "more difficult" for territory within a district to withdraw. The board said that in light of this, it will "rule in favor of deleting territory in the initial formation of a district if the educational benefits to such a territory do not appear self-evident."

BEAUTY TURNED BANDIT—Beauty queen turned bandit is the theme of an upcoming movie. Ex-Beauty Queen Turned Bandit To Be Theme of Movie

Canon City, Colo. - (UPI) - A beauty queen turned bandit - that's the theme of an upcoming movie titled "The Girl, the Gun."

The subject is a tall, 22-year-old brunette serving time for robbery in Colorado State Penitentiary here.

Two years ago, Dixie Anne Dikes was crowned Miss Colorado Jaycee of 1958. She reigned over the Junior Chamber of Commerce celebration at Centennial Race Track near Denver.

Ten months later, she was arrested for the $131 robbery of a suburban drug store. She has been in jail ever since.

Gallbreath Studios has obtained movie rights to her story - a Cinderella tale in reverse. Harold Robbins, famous for his "Never Love a Stranger," will direct the film.

Dixie has been on police records for some time. She was arrested on assault charges in her home town of Pueblo, Colo., as a teenager, and was listed as a runaway in 1957.

But this didn't stop her from blazing the beauty contest trail. She was runner-up in the Miss Pueblo competition the same year she won the Jaycee title.

She returned to Pueblo in November, 1958, but couldn't stay out of trouble. She got into a fight with three policemen in a tavern once during the fall.

Back in Denver the next spring, Dixie needed money - "to get a new start," an officer quoted her. Friends have said she was so poor she had to trade empty pop bottles for her groceries.

She staged two stickups in two days, using the same technique both times.

Her method was to stand on a corner looking beautiful, until some man picked her up.

Then she'd ask him to stop and wait for her while she went in, once to a store, the other time to a hotel. The innocent companion thus provided a handy getaway car.

Dixie tried it at Denver's Newhouse Hotel and got $17 from the desk clerk. Then she tried it at the Aurora Pharmacy, but the druggist pursued her and shot at the car five times. Dixie was captured in an alley a block-and-a-half from the store a few minutes later.

The hot-tempered girl knocked down a newspaper photographer who tried to take her picture at police headquarters later in the day.

By that time, Dixie had married William Gottfried. She said the wedding was in September, 1958, but he claims it was in 1957, before her beauty contest victory.

Gottfried is serving a term in the Illinois State Prison for the Criminally Insane for kidnapping a policeman.

He told the warden there he was "hopped up on dope" when he married Dixie and did it "more or less on a dare from my friends."

No Firing Pin

Dixie had a .32 caliber pistol with her in the Aurora holdup, but it had no firing pin so the charge against her was reduced from aggravated to simple robbery.

She was sentenced to the Colorado State Reformatory for an indeterminate term in July, 1959. Since the reformatory has no women's quarters, she was held at Denver County Jail.

Last December the parole board transferred her to the penitentiary "to get her away from less desirable associates at the county jail and to provide better rehabilitation facilities."

An appeal for parole was turned down in February.
