Obituaries

WILLIAM W. BATES
Private funeral services for William W. Bates, 88 of 32 Geneva st., who died Thursday, will be held in the Conger-Morris downtown chapel Tuesday at 11 a.m. with the Rev. D. E. Millard officiating. Committal will be in the IOOF mausoleum.
Mr. Bates was born near Eldon, Iowa, June 8, 1872. He came to Medford in the spring of 1892 with his parents, the late Joel T. and Elizabeth Bates. In 1901, together with his brothers, James and Clarence, he purchased 115 acres east of Medford, cleared the land and put in one of the valley's first pear and apple orchards, known as the Bates orchard. The apple orchard produced about 4,800 boxes a year. These were later removed and the entire acreage planted in pears, with the trees still producing. The orchard was sold in the spring of 1911 to H. Chandler Egan, who was then the amateur golf champion of America.
About 1894, Mr. Bates became interested in barbering, and with his brother, James, opened a barber shop on Central ave. A year later he moved the shop to the Nash hotel, remaining there until 1910. Then, together with his three brothers, he moved the barber shop to 128 West Main st., where it still remains. He retired in 1955 because of poor health. At the time of his retirement, his barber shop was the oldest business in Medford under continuous management.
Surviving is his wife, Elizabeth; two sisters, Mrs. C. A. Hamlin and Mrs. Charles B. Gay; and two brothers, Clarence and James Bates, all of Medford.

Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins
Even Most Astute Students
No one could possibly credit this aquatic character with the pointed head with having hardly more than a dim flicker of crab-intelligence, for he has no more brain than a hammer handle. Yet the spider-crab performs some actions that befuddle the most astute students of marine biology. Some of his stunts smack of reasoning power; something akin to color-consciousness or at least a meager knowledge of botany and animal growth.
Burrows in Mud
The spider-crab, so-called because of its exceedingly long legs, prefers living in clumps of seaweed or burrowing down in the soft mud of a bay. It is the largest of the crabs, a vegetable eating creature, doing most of its foraging during the night. The surface of the odd-shaped body is rough and covered with an assortment of hairs, bristles, spines and prickles. Mixed in with these protuberances are wart-like mounds, all making for a very messy appearance. The spider-crab is no beauty.
About the time early adulthood is attained, the spider-crab begins the serious business of self-adornment. It wants to hide under a blanket of living organisms. Carefully it selects bits of seaweed, a piece of sponge, some hydroids, in fact any plant or animal life that can tolerate transplanting or mutilation. The piece of material is carried to the crab's mouth where it is moistened with saliva, mixed with some sort of adhesive, then carefully placed on the back.
The crab's foreclaw holds the material in place until it adheres. Once in place the piece of seaweed, sponge or other animal or plant life grows and flourishes.
Here hardly noticed by human observers until recently, enter the perplexing questions. The transplanting action seems a little uncanny, for the crab only transplants those things that will live when placed on its back. It
