Christian Worship Gives Many Titles To Supreme Act

By LOUIS CASSELS
United Press International
To Roman Catholics, it is the Mass. In Eastern Orthodox churches, it is the Eucharist. Among Anglicans, it is known as Holy Communion. Many Protestants prefer to call it the Lord's Supper.

Whatever its title, it is the central and supreme act of Christian worship. It was instituted by Christ himself at his last supper with his disciples, in the upper room of a house in Jerusalem, a few hours before He was arrested, tried and crucified. Found in Corinthians

The earliest written account of the simple ritual He performed, and the meaning He gave to it, is found in St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians.

"... the Lord Jesus in the night in which He was betrayed took bread; and when He had given thanks, He brake it, and said, 'This is my body, which is broken for you: This do in remembrance of me.' In like manner also the cup, after supper, saying, 'This cup is the new covenant in my blood: This do, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.'"

This bread and wine were Christians, with the body and blood of Christ which were sacrificed to redeem men from their sins.

Eucharist, from a Greek word meaning thanksgiving, seems to have the earliest term applied to the rite. Ancient records show that regular celebration of the Eucharist began in the primitive Christian Church early in the First Century A.D. It has continued ever since in virtually all branches of Christendom, the Quakers being the most notable exception.

Different in Nature
Although Christians are united in their fidelity to this act of worship, they differ considerably in their understanding of its nature and significance.

Some Protestants, for example, Baptists, Disciples of Christ and pentecostals groups - observe the Lord's Supper as a "memorial" service. They believe that its primary purpose is simply to remind Christians that "while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."

Hornbrook Group Lists Speakers

ASHLAND SERMON

Ashland - "Give All to Christ" will be the sermon topic Sunday at the 8:30 and 11 a.m. worship services at Grace Lutheran church, Frances lane, Ashland. Vicar John Kliffner will speak. The text will be Matthe. 18:16-26.

But the vast majority of Christians in the world - including Catholics, Orthodox, Anglicans, Lutherans, Presbyterians and Methodists - regard the Eucharist as a "sacrament," or sacred mystery. They hold that God acts through the sacrament in a supernatural way to impart to believers the uplifting of mind, the purifying of motive and the strengthening of will that is called grace.

Among the sacramental churches, however, there are strongly-held differences of doctrine about the nature of the Eucharistic miracle. It is Catholic and Orthodox teaching that the elements of the service, which retaining the external appearance of bread and wine, are literally changed in Catholic terminology, "transubstantiated" into the body and blood of Christ at the moment of consecration.

These communions regard the celebration of the mass as a "renewal" or "re-enactment" of Christ's sacrifice on the cross.

Leaders of the Protestant Reformation rejected the doctrine of transubstantiation and sought to eliminate from the Mass any suggestion of a "repetition" of the atoning act of Christ which, they said, was performed once and for all on Calvary.

While asserting that the bread and wine of communion are sacred symbols rather than the literal body and blood of Christ, the Reformation churches held - and still hold - that Christ is spiritually "present" in the Eucharist in a real and unique sense. They believe that those who partake of the sacrament therefore partake of Christ, receiving His spirit as nourishment of their souls.

Other differences among Christian bodies concern details of the service.
