SP Names New Freight Agent For Medford

A. E. Armstrong Jr. assumed duties as freight agent for the Southern Pacific company at Medford last week. This position was formerly held by C. B. Stevens who died in June.

Armstrong started with the Southern Pacific company as a telegrapher on the Portland division in 1948 shortly after leaving his home state of Kansas. He was employed as agent at Mill City, Brooks, North Bend and Coos Bay, where he served until his arrival at Medford. He was also one of the Oregon agents, chosen by the management, to attend a series of programs outlining specialized operations which were held in San Francisco.

Armstrong served 2½ years with the U. S. Navy during World War II and, since his discharge, has participated in various American Legion activities. While at Mill City he held the position of Legion commander for one year. He officiated as umpire for amateur baseball games sponsored by the Legion and softball games under the auspices of the Oregon Amateur Softball tournaments which were held at Oregon City, Coos Bay and Corvallis.

During his residence at Coos Bay, he was elected to the chamber of commerce board of directors.

Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong and three children are presently making their home at 1201 Mt. Pitt ave.

Maurine Calls for Recreation Funds

Hood River —(UPI)— Maurine Neuberger, candidate for U.S. senate, called here Sunday for increased Federal appropriations for camping, recreation and winter sports facilities in the national forests in Oregon.

Speaking at a Hood River county Democratic picnic, Mrs. Neuberger said the appropriations are needed to meet the growing outdoor recreation demands that "are increasing six times faster than the rate of population growth."

Mrs. Neuberger said that more leisure time and better highways have increased the pressure on existing facilities.

The jet-age airport will open for business in the summer of 1961. (UPI Telephoto)

Composer Mowrey Dies in Portland

Portland —(UPI)— Internationally known Portland composer-pianist Dent Mowrey, 72, died here Saturday.

Mowrey, who was born in New York City, came to Portland in the late 1920s. He was educated in France and was a graduate of Leipzig Conservatory of Music in Germany.

The most recent of his published compositions were "Festival" and "Scherzo in Double Notes."

Goldwater Slates Portland Speech

Portland —(UPI)— Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona has announced he will speak at a Republican rally here next Sunday.

Also in attendance at the huge picnic-style rally will be Elmo Smith, Republican candidate for the U. S. senate, and Gov. Mark Hatfield.

Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins

King of the Vegetables Is the Common Potato

The real Horatio Alger of the entire plant kingdom would seem to be the common potato.

No other member of the plant world has ever equalled the phenomenal growth in edibility of this plant known as the white potato. Of all vegetables few, if any, equals it for universal appeal, reasonableness in price and availability. Mr. Potato is about as important as a vegetable can be.

It is really not Irish at all, unless it is called that because of the extensiveness of its acreage in Ireland, or the fact it furnishes the bulk of the food for the Irish people. Actually, the white potato had its origin in Peru, it was cultivated for food and was called the "Apple of Peru."

A Spaniard by the name of Pedro de Leon shipped many bushles of the fleshy tubers to Spain sometime in the 16th century, from which point the potato spread to all of Europe and to Ireland. And all this happened about a hundred years after a venturesome sailor by the name of Columbus sailed for what we are now proud to call America.

In New World

Some early settlers to the New World brought some seed potatoes, sometime around 1720, and the first potato patch was planted somewhere in the state of New Hampshire. The popularity of the potato was as rapid in the new world as was its adoption in the gardens of Europe and every pioneer garden had potatoes, growing alongside the Indian maize. The potato, along with the abundance of wild game, fed the early Americans and made possible an America such as we have today.

This prolific vegetable practically saved the German people from starvation during two world wars, and probably ranks, even today, as one of the principal foods of Germany, Ireland and most of the Balkan countries.

The white potato belongs to the family of plants known as the Nightshades, related to the tomato, eggplant, and even tobacco. In the outer skin of the potato is a mild alkaloid poison, which closely resembles nicotine that is a part of tobacco; its liberation during cooking is what gives the characteristic, and sometimes very pronounced odor, usually noticed when potatoes "are cooked with their jackets on."

Deficient in Fats

Potatoes are deficient in fats, but very high in starch, and water content; for this reason they are avoided by many people who fear overweight; but in spite of a mild boycott by dietists and portly folks, the lowly potato is easily recognized as the most popular vegetable in the entire world, and that covers a whale of a lot of territory.

It probably would be conservative to say that the overwhelming majority of Americans eat potatoes at least twice a day, year in and year out; which accounts for a tremendous tonnage of potatoes.

The annual crop in the United States alone is somewhere near, or perhaps over, the billion bushel mark, which certainly couldn't be considered "small potatoes." And this vegetable has accomplished all this in a comparatively short time.
