

State Rates Over Love In Red China

New York—(Science Service) An admirer of a Communist Chinese girl told her that he was going to Korea to fight against the Americans. She told him, "Go ahead. It is only after you say you are going to Korea to fight for our country that I feel I love you."

This is how Chinese Communists weave indoctrination into love stories. The example is from Chinese magazine literature and was reported by Dr. Lucy Jen Huang of Boston University to the American Sociological association here.

She cited a similar sentiment, expressed by an admirer who watched the beautiful colors of the sky at sunset with his Chinese girl friend.

He waxed poetic and said he would like to weave her a cloth from the multicolors of the sky. His much more practical girl friend answered that in this time of urgent production and reconstruction he should rather weave blue and gray cloth for the soldiers.

Dr. Huang said that today the editors of Chinese magazines are told by the leaders of the country what stories to publish in order to indoctrinate the people. She told Science Service that she got the data for her report from the bi-weekly Chinese magazine, Women of China.

Patterns Changing

Dr. Huang reported that the patterns of dating and courtship are changing in Communist China, although some of the old customs still influence the thinking of the people.

She said there is much greater freedom in choosing a mate in China today than there was in earlier times. There are no arranged marriages any more, she said.

These are, however, some semi-arranged marriages, mostly made by friends of the couple.

The women of Communist China tend to exploit the male more than in former times, and they negotiate more to get what they want in a spouse, Dr. Huang said. There is a great deal of dependency on women in the Communist Chinese society, and men cater more to women than they used to do.

Chinese engagements are short, Dr. Huang said. Just as in older times, young Chinese find it difficult to meet for a long time and get emotionally involved without getting married. Illegitimacy is frowned upon today as it was in earlier times.

Early Marriages

The legal age for marriage in Communist China is 18 for women and 20 for men. This is earlier than before. Because of the early marriages, many women have three children by the time they are 25 and lose valuable working hours for the state.

This worries the leaders of the regime, and they therefore try to persuade women to marry at a later age. Today many poems praise the woman who goes to work on her wedding day. Such a woman is called a heroine in Chinese literature, Dr. Huang said.

Today the ideal woman works for five years while she lets her marriage wait until she has fulfilled this duty to the state. This type woman in Chinese literature even forgets dates with her fiancé as she works eagerly for the state.

There are many reasons for the early marriages in Communist China, Dr. Huang said.

Little Money Needed

1. Not much money is needed. Communist Chinese do not have elaborate weddings. If they do, people criticize them. Weddings used to be great occasions in China, and Dr. Huang said that older people regret these new modest marriages.

2. When they get out of school, the state sends them anywhere. Therefore many young people marry someone from the home environment so the two can go away together instead of finding a mate in a strange environment.

3. There are no worries about getting a job. Everyone has to work, regardless.

The Chinese Communists teach through their magazine literature a "socialist morality" in which the state comes first ideally and where love is based on contribution to the party, Dr. Huang said.

Of the five good virtues taught in modern Communist China number one is that everyone should be a good producer. The other virtues concern good health, simple and frugal living, neighborliness and studiousness.

She said that Communism is trying to capitalize on old teachings that emphasize that one should think about the family, not about the self. The

Doctor's Burned Hand Leads To New Treatment

Chicago (Science Service)—The pain of burns can be lessened and healing speeded by immediate treatment with ice water, a physician has accidentally discovered.

Dr. Alex G. Shulman of Los Angeles began this treatment eight years ago after he burned his own hand with boiling grease.

"In the ensuing agonizing few minutes," he said, "it seemed logical to plunge the hand into a tub of cold water."

Dr. Shulman found that after about an hour's immersion his hand could be removed without further pain of any consequence and that the burn seemed to heal more rapidly than he expected.

He reports in the Journal of the American Medical Association published here that since his accident he has successfully used ice water as an initial treatment of 150 patients for burns of all degrees but covering less than 20 per cent of the body. Should Begin at Once

The treatment should be begun at once, but if patients come in already bandaged, Dr. Shulman soaks off the dressing under ice water and continues the immersion from 30 minutes to five hours. Pain may return as the water becomes warm but the addition of ice cubes gives continued relief.

No infections occurred in patients treated within one hour after the burn.

Chilled Towels

The physician adds hexachlorophene to the ice water in a basin, or if burns of the head, neck, shoulders, chest or other portions of the anatomy make immersion impractical, he applies towels chilled in the disinfected solution.

Dr. Shulman has observed that the usual inflammation following the burn can be reduced and at times stopped by ice water therapy. He says: "While the value of this mode of therapy for patients with extensive burns in shock remains to be tested on a large scale, its merits for those with burns of lesser degree should not be doubted."

Fair Campaign Code Is Signed

Washington—(UPI)—The Republican and Democratic national chairmen have signed a fair campaign practices code and joined in denouncing religious "bigotry."

Sens. Thurston B. Morton, R-Ky., and Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., signed the code Wednesday.

About 1,200 candidates, excluding the presidential and vice presidential nominees, will be asked to sign the code. After the ceremonies, Charles P. Taft, chairman of the Fair Campaign Practices committee, Inc., reported that vulgar religious propaganda was appearing "all over the country."

The three officials emphasized that the objectionable campaign materials usually were what Taft described as "the underground kind of stuff," entirely unrelated to any regular party organization.

Taft said his group was becoming more and more convinced that "offensive" campaign materials were "almost certain to backfire" against the candidate in whose support they were circulated.
