The Family Council Better Life On Earth Is Goal Of Backward States

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, three editors and a women's editor. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Caroline S.—His only interest is nude photography. Glen S.—I look on it as art.

Caroline S.—My husband and I have been married six years and have two children—a girl, 5, and a son, 3. Our marriage hasn't been happy from the first. We always had a lot of fights, mainly about in-law problems and the fact that Glen doesn't ever take me out or have any interest in our home. His one interest is photography—using a nude model—and this is something else that makes me very angry. I feel this isn't right for a married man.

When I say anything to him he says, "O.K., let's get a divorce." I don't want to break up the marriage because of the children.

Glen S.—I think it's worse for children to listen to constant bickering than for them to live in a broken home. I notice that our little girl looks frightened every time Caroline screams at me, which she does nine-tenths of the time I am home.

I feel a man is entitled to one hobby and mine has always been photography. I am very serious about this and have even won an award in a contest. Anybody who thinks photographing the nude model is wrong has a dirty mind. I look on it as art. All of the great painters have done the same.

The way I see it, Caroline is just looking for trouble. I have been a faithful husband. I don't drink or gamble. I come home every night. She ought to be satisfied.

The Council: Glen's statement of his virtues as a husband puts him in the passable class. He has none of the common, major defects of husbands. But we don't think most wives would feel satisfied with just that. Caroline is clamoring for Rehevoth, Israel (Science Service)—A better life on earth, not a trip to the moon or other planets, is the goal of the Asian and African delegates to the International Conference on Science in the Advancement of New States in session here at the Weizmann Institute of Science.

Finance Minister Dr. S. E. Imoke of Eastern Nigeria, which will become an independent nation in Oct. 1, expressed the hope that countries from the Eastern bloc especially the Soviet Union, would join in the attempt to harness scientific and technological knowledge for the less privileged on earth before proceeding with ambitious programs in outer space and trips to the moon.

Oleskiewidz Requests Name Change to Okay

New Britain, Conn.—A judge said "OK" to the request of Edward J. Oleskiewidz that his name be changed to Edward J. Okay.

knowing that they are unable to live with and share love with another person.

They have the ability to solve their problems, but they must recognize that it will take effort. Once they have set the goal and accepted the responsibility of meeting it, they will be on the road to making a successful marriage.

He said, "We do not ask for the moon... all we seek is guidance, assistance and cooperation in our efforts to extract from the resources of our countries a more abundant life."

The Afro-Asian delegates have asked that high priority be given to discussion of such basic problems as high mortality, relief from hunger, primary and secondary education, and advanced research on development of industry or commerce relating to economic requirements.

Their request was underscored by the urgent plea of Rev. Solomon Caulker, vice president of University College, Sierra Leone (scheduled for independence from Britain, April 27, 1961), who asked the conference to take up specific problems of countries like his own "where eight out of ten babies are doomed to die within the first year of their life."

He called for scientific help in preparing a program for medical teaching and techniques "realistically" related to economic conditions of the new states.

Air Conditioned Autos No Longer Luxury For Just Few

By HENRY J. BECHTOLD
UPI Financial Editor

New York (UPI)—Automotive air conditioning, like swimming pools and two cars, no longer is a luxury for only a chosen few.

In 1956 about 46 per cent of the automotive air conditioning units went into high priced cars.

Henry Bechtold 29 per cent into medium priced autos and 25 per cent into low priced cars.

Only three years later, in 1959, about 31 per cent of these units were installed in the higher priced cars, 26 per cent in the medium range and 43 per cent in low priced cars.

Everybody Wants

This year air conditioning is making further inroads in the low priced car market, particularly, to everyone's surprise, in compact autos.

Auto makers had made no provisions for offering air conditioning as an optional accessory on their 1960 compacts, and, as a result, the independent makers of "hang-on" cooling units reaped an unexpected windfall, according to Warner Electric Brake & Clutch Co. The 1961 models will be a different story, however, with most car manufacturers offering air conditioning.

Air conditioning in automobiles has made great strides since 1953 when only 0.7 per cent of that year's new models were so equipped and the industry chalked up sales of 40,600 units.

Five years ago 176,000 units were sold and 2.4 per cent of the cars boasted air conditioning. This year, the industry estimates sales will reach 670,000 units, meaning 10 per cent of all new cars will be air conditioned. Unit sales are forecast to reach 750,000 next year and about 1.2 million by 1965.

Warner noted that while the Southwest, with its high temperatures, continues to be the prime market for automotive air conditioners, the industry is experiencing rapid growth throughout the nation. The Northern and Midwestern states are expected to account for 30 per cent of car air conditioning sales in 1960.

Salesmen and corporate car fleet owners in the north are big customers for air conditioned cars. Truck air conditioning also is becoming popular.

Used All-Year Round

Warner, a leading supplier of air conditioning compressor clutches, noted that although car air conditioners are considered a convenience only in hot weather, they frequently are used by motorists in the spring and fall months. It explained that operation of the air conditioner permits the driver to ride with the windows closed, thereby escaping annoying road noises, draft discomfort, hay fever pollen and dirt.

The refrigerant type of automotive air conditioner was invented in 1937 but was not produced commercially until the late 1940s. The first units were custom made and cost from $900 to $1,400. The units also were cumbersome, taking up a car's entire trunk compartment.

Custom units were produced for a limited market until 1953 when technological improvements enabled the mass production of air conditioners which could be fitted on virtually any car. Today the price on such units range from $200 to $400, Warner said.

The independent manufacturers of automotive air conditioners, most of whom are located in the Southwest, had the market to themselves until 1953 when the auto manufacturers began offering their own makes as optional equipment.

Ashland's Palace Cafe Is Purchased

Ashland—Charles Walters, Ashland, became the new owner of the Palace cafe, 171 East Main st., Thursday.

He purchased the cafe from Virgil Jackson, who was the owner-manager since 1952.

The cafe was opened in 1922 by Jackson's father, W. D. Jackson. Although the cafe's location shifted several times between 1922 and 1935, it has been in the same location since that latter date.

Two Attend Weddings; One Right, One Wrong

Albany, N. Y.—An out-of-town couple drove here for the wedding of a relative.

Cars were parked around the First Christian church. The couple went inside, deposited their gift in the reception room and settled down to watch.

The bride walked down the aisle. "That's not her," the wife exclaimed. The couple departed hurriedly, finally arriving at the wedding they planned to attend. It already was in progress at the First Methodist church.
