The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Clinic

Hiatal Hernia

These days I get dozens of requests for information and advice in regard to a hiatal heria, (the passage of a bit of the stomach through a hole in the midriff and up into the chest.) Sometimes the person says surgeons want to operate, but from what he or she writes, it is fairly obvious that the slight abnormality which was found accidentally–during a "check-up" x-ray study–is not producing any symptoms. Certainly, if I had a hiatal hernia and had no symptoms or–and this is important–no symptoms that I was sure were due to the hernia, no one would ever operate on me.

DR. ALVAREZ

Even if I had some mild symptoms that possibly could be due to the hernia, I would much prefer to keep them and put up with them rather than have a big and difficult operation. In my 25 years at the Mayo Clinic, I must have seen hundreds of patients with a diaphragmatic (hiatal) hernia, and I never saw one with trouble so severe that either I advised an operation, or one of our able surgeons wanted to operate. Many of these patients have since written to thank me for not having had them operated on for their hernia.

Some of the people I see with a hiatal hernia get symptoms only after a big meal, and then perhaps only when they reach over to untie their shoes. Then they can feel a little pain in their middle, or they may feel as if they wanted to burp. Occasionally, all one has to do to give a stout person relief from a hiatal hernia is to put him on a diet that will take 40 pounds off his abdomen. Then he may be comfortable. Occasionally, I see a person with a hiatal hernia and I am puzzled as to the source of his pain because he has coronary heart disease, or/and some gallstones. Either one, or both, of these diseases easily could account for his pain. In conclusion, then, I would say, better avoid operation whenever possible.

Nerve Deafness

Dozens of people ask me how they can be cured of nerve deafness, and I cannot tell them. There are two main types of deafness: one, a conduction deafness, and another, a nerve deafness. In the case of a conduction deafness there is something wrong somewhere in the mechanism which carries the waves of sound from the eardrum, through the three tiny little bones in the middle ear, through the "oval window," and into the tiny marimba-like hearing mechanism in the inner ear. With a conduction deafness, the person often can be helped with an operation, or with one of the usual hearing-aids. But if the nerve which normally carries sensation from the little marimba to the brain is injured or destroyed by disease, quite obviously, there is little that an ear-doctor can do. He cannot make a new nerve.

World Affairs To Have Big Impact on Presidential Bids

Des Moines–(UPI)–The impact of international affairs is greater on the current Presidential campaign than at any time since World War II, according to a veteran White House reporter.

Merriman Smith, of United Press International, said both the Republicans and Democrats will be put to a stern political test by the forthcoming visit of Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev to the United Nations.

Smith spoke at the silver anniversary meeting and clinic of the Iowa Daily Press association.

Important Issue

"The first task facing the U. N. Assembly this month promises to become one of the more important issues of the American campaign because, as Secretary of State Christian Herter said this week, this country has seen no indication that Khrushchev is coming to really do business," Smith said.

"Rather, the Soviet Premier's purpose is more to gain high-powered publicity and whatever Khrushchev says or does in the U. N. will tend to be critical of, or opposed to, the foreign policies of the Eisenhower administration," he said.

Smith said Khrushchev's U. N. visit would be enough to inject world affairs into the American campaign. Some of Khrushchev's anticipated criticisms "will rebound to the benefit" of the Republicans and the Presidential hopes of Vice President Richard M. Nixon, and "put the Democrats somewhat on the spot," he said.

Smith explained that the Democrats "Don't want to be in the position of attacking the Republican administration's conduct of foreign policy in the U.N. if it has the effect of giving comfort to Khrushchev."

On the domestic scene, Smith said it was his impression that the religious issue would be a dominant one in the outcome of the Nov. 8 election.

"Despite what a great many people would like to believe, religion is going to be just as live an issue as it was in 1928," he said.

He referred to the election of former Republican President Herbert Hoover, a native of West Branch, Iowa, and a Quaker over Democrat Al Smith, a Catholic and former New York governor.

An identical religious situation faces the voters this fall, Smith said, with Nixon, the Republican, being a Quaker, and the Democratic candidate, Sen. John F. Kennery of Massachusetts, a Catholic.

The religious issue was bitterly fought in 1928 and many people, including some political leaders, believed that Smith's Catholic faith was largely responsible for his defeat.

"It would be wonderful to be able to say flatly that America has thrown off much of her deeply ingrained differences between religions since the Hoover-Smith campaign, and I hope we find that to be true," Smith told the Iowa editors and publishers.

"Since 1928, however, the population has grown immensely and so have our facilities for communication, so that today it is much easier and much faster to communicate prejudice and bias over a vast area than it was in 1928," he said.

Woman Ready For Embalming Found Breathing

Gallatin, Mo.–(UPI)–A woman who had been pronounced dead resumed breathing faintly in the embalming room of a mortuary here last Friday and was rushed to a hospital at Cameron, Mo., where she was reported in good condition today.

L. O. Richardson, who operates the Hope Mortuary here, said he and an assistant were about to begin embalming the "body" of Mrs. Gilbert Claycomb, 54, when he saw "a faint stirring. You could hardly call it a breath, really."

He summoned the physician who had pronounced Mrs. Claycomb dead at her farm home about four miles from here. Oxygen was administered while Mrs. Claycomb lay on a the cot on which she been brought into the embalming room. When her breathing strengthened she was rushed to Cameron by ambulance.

Expected to Recover

Attendants said today her condition was much improved. Asked whether she was expected to recover, a nursing supervisor said "oh my, yes."

The nature of Mrs. Claycomb's illness was not disclosed. Her husband found her lying motionless and apparently dead in the basement of their house on his return home late Friday.

"She had turned blue and she certainly looked dead," Richardson said.

"I don't know what I said when I saw she was alive," he said. "I was pretty well stunned for a second. But in a way a mortician always realizes something like that could happen. In one way it was sort of routine. I didn't realize it all until it was over," he said.
