The wood is straight-grained, ideal as a pencil stock, handsome as paneling, siding and roof decking. Its decay-resistant properties fit it to hundreds of farm, industrial and home uses.

Home at La Grande Hit by Lightning

La Grande—(UPI)—Lightning early today struck a home here and heavily damaged a room where a high school student was sleeping but the youth escaped injury.

The bolt struck the home of C. W. Hoffman about midnight. A radio in the room was shattered, a hole was knocked in a wall, plaster was cracked, a quarter-inch piece of glass covering a desk was broken, curtains and the roof were scorched and the window sill was blackened.

Steve Waller, a student at La Grande High school and grandson of Hoffman, was asleep in a bed in the opposite corner from where the bolt struck and escaped injury.

The British merchant marine and fishing fleets lost 24,000 men at sea in World War II.

State Grange Influential in Getting Measure on Ballot

The Oregon State Grange has been "very influential" in placing the billboard measure on the November ballot to outlaw "outrageous" signs on highways, Victor H. Croxton told the Medford Chamber of Commerce Roundtable luncheon Monday.

Croxton, who is state Grange lecturer and state deputy in charge of the southern Oregon Granges, had been invited by the roundtable group to summarize the Granges' origin, its purpose and its activities.

There seems to be a general misunderstanding on just what the billboard measure provides for, Croxton said. He explained that the measure, if passed, will not automatically prohibit all billboards along Oregon highways, but it will restrict the distance from the highway of signs that are placed along new highways in Oregon.

The Granges efforts to place the billboard measure on the ballot is but one of many accomplishments the Grange has made on the state and national scenes since its founding 94 years ago, Croxton said.

One of the most "clear-cut victories" of the Grange was the establishment of rural free mail delivery in the country, according to Croxton.

Other legislation, listed by Croxton, that the Grange has helped support and some of its accomplishments, include: The protection of the initiative, recall and referendum laws in the state of Oregon. These "rights" was actually abolished in Oregon at one time, but in 1906 the Grange succeeded in reestablishing them, he said.

The establishment of a Secretary of Agriculture in both the national and state governments.

Having state Senators elected directly by the people instead of by state legislatures.

Establishment of agricultural colleges, notably, Oregon State college, Oregon Technical Institute and California Polytechnical Institute.

The Pure Food and Drug Act.

Concerning Fabrics —The "Truth in Fabrics Bill," later passed in the U.S. Senate as the "Wool Labeling Act," which requires that labels be placed in clothing telling what material the clothing is made of.

Public utilities districts in Oregon.

Education scholar ships and education loan grants.

Today the Grange is fighting for a more direct approach for the sale of farmer's products, Croxton said. He noted that today only 27 per cent of the profits from a farmers crop are actually getting back to the farmer, compared to 40 per cent of the profits in 1940. He said, "we are losing our farms rapidly."

Actually "simon-pure" farmer.

one a year and passes on resolutions presented to it from the Pomona Granges. If approved, Croxton said, then this proposed legislation goes to the state legislature or if it is of national importance it goes to the national Grange organization.

The national Grange also meets once a year and is comprised of the state Grange masters and their wives. Legislation approved by this national body then goes to Congress.

The Grange maintains active "lobbies" in both the state legislatures and Congress, he pointed out.

Croxton, who resides in Sams Valley, said it is his opinion that Roxy Ann Grange is probably the leading Grange among the 15 Granges in Jackson county. He noted that this Grange is located within the city limits of Medford and is comprised largely of city-dwellers who have an interest in farming and its problems.

One of the primary goals of the Grange today is to make people "wake up to these things that are happening in our very midst." By these Croxton meant the penetration of Communism in the U.S. and its threat to the American way of life.

He criticized the U.S. as being "one of the most apathetic nations on the face of the earth today." He said the Grange is attempting to rid the country of its apathy by teaching its members and their children that such things as liberty and freedom should not be taken for granted because they are "not God-given privileges."

Croxton said Granges do not attempt to speak for the farmer, but do try to speak for the "Grange farmer." He concluded that the membership of Granges has changed throughout the years from persons who make a living from the soil to persons who "love the soil."

There are 331 "subordinate" Granges in Oregon encompassing a membership of 29,000, he said. Granges can be found in 39 states.

Croxton called the Grange "a storehouse of friendship and a common cause." It is the oldest farming organization in the U.S., and the oldest farming fraternity in the world, he pointed out.

The Grange is often referred to as being "non-political" Croxton said, but this is wrong. Although Granges are political they are non-partisan in their politics, he said.

A Grange never questions a member's politics, religion or color, he added.

"Grass Roots" Granges are the "grass roots" Granges, Croxton said, and they meet in more than 5,000 different Grange halls throughout the country.

Next in line is the Pomona Grange, which is a Grange on the county level. It is composed of the local Granges and is often referred to as the "political Grange" because this is where many of the political ideas of members are adopted into resolution form and passed onto the state Grange for action.

The state Grange in Oregon is composed of the Grange Masters and their wives of the 331 subordinate Granges and also the masters and their wives of the 36 county-level Pomona Granges.
