Average Americans Two Inches Taller Than 60 Years Ago

Washington - (UPI) - Young men and women in the United States now average about two inches taller than those of 60 years ago, according to an agriculture department report. They also average 69 1/2 inches tall and women 64 1/2 inches. Before the turn of the century average heights were 67 1/2 inches for men and 62 1/2 inches for women.

Linked To Education - The survey in 1955 indicated that men and women with some college training were taller and lighter than those with only elementary education. The same survey indicated that younger home-makers with more formal education provided the most nutritious diets.

Immigration apparently has had considerable effect on the average height of people in the United States at different periods. U.S. soldiers in World War I (1917-1919) were somewhat shorter than soldiers of the Civil War in the 1860s. Prior to 1860, the largest proportion of immigrants to the United States were German and Irish, who were relatively tall. After 1880 there was a sharp increase in the proportion of Italian and Russian immigrants, who on the average, were considerably shorter.
