USO Benefits by United Crusade

The United Service Organization, Inc. (USO), which is a member agency of the United Medford Crusade, serves some 1,793 men and women from Jackson county who are now in the armed services.

According to Louis G. Feldman, commander-in-chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, "morale is an enormous factor in determining the efficiency of all branches of our armed forces."

He said that the USO contributes immensely to the happiness of our uniformed men and women, and to the high morale of our armed forces everywhere.

Members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars know by personal experience the transformation that results from the appearance of a group of theatrical artists through USO shows wherever our armed forces are stationed.

Since many young men and women from Jackson county are members of the armed forces and are receiving service from USO the United Medford Crusade budgets a moderate amount for the support of this national organization in the hope that young men and women will have a touch of "home away from home" wherever they may be.

Japan Royalty In Washington
Washington — (UPI) — The future emperor and empress of Japan arrived Tuesday for a state visit and joined U.S. officials in pledging "a brilliant new century of Japanese-American friendship and cooperation."

Crown Prince Akihito and his pretty ex-commoner Princess Michiko received a red carpet welcome when they arrived from Los Angeles aboard President Eisenhower's plane, Columbine III.

The royal couple, symbols of Japan's postwar conversion to democracy, were accorded all of the welcoming ceremonies usually given state visitors except for an airport greeting by President Eisenhower. The President was in New York dealing with the United Nations crisis but planned to fly back this afternoon to welcome the visitors at a White House state dinner tonight.

After the airport ceremony, the prince and princess rode in separate convertibles into the city to Blair House, the official guest house across the street from the White House. The parade route was lined with Japan's rising sun flags and American flags.

UO To Observe 84th Anniversary

Eugene—The University of Oregon's celebration of the 84th anniversary of its founding will also celebrate the inauguration of its new Honors college. The celebration will be Oct. 18 and 19.

C. P. Snow, British writer and commentator on the chasms between the intellectuals in sciences and humanities, will give the address on Tuesday night in celebration of the Honors college.

Charter Day Convocation speaker Wednesday, Oct. 19, will be John W. Gardner, president of the Carnegie corporation.

The two-day observance, honoring the founding of the university Oct. 17, 1876, will be opened by a musical event.

At the Charter Day convocation, at 2:30 p.m., the faculty will hold a robed procession. The events of the Charter Day are open to the public.

Doctors To Watch For Addition to Flu-Causing Virus

By DELOS SMITH
UPI Science Editor
New York — (UPI) — There is a talented addition to the viruses known to be responsible for flu and suspected of complicity in the common cold which physicians will be on the lookout for this fall and winter.

This virus was discovered in 1956 in the noses and later the deeper air passages of chimpanzees. Now it turns out it doesn't have to have monkeys in order to propagate. People will do.

But its talent is in specialization as well as versatility. Not only can it inflame the linings of the nose which gives it its original name, "chimpanzee coryza agent," but it is equally adept in the lung's smallest air tubes, the bronchioles.

Fragile in Cold
Fortunately for people it appears to be fragile, especially in temperatures below freezing. This accounts for the failure of several scientific efforts to locate it in enough human noses and bronchioles to prove it was not mainly a monkey virus.

This proof has now been produced by Drs. Marc Beem, F. H. Wright and Dorothy Hamre of the University of Chicago's School of Medicine. They produced it in 291 children ranging in age from infants to teenagers who were patients in the school's children's hospital.

All these noses and throats were swabbed. Bits of the cotton were put into test tubes in which body cells were living in cultural baths. The idea behind this is that if viruses were picked up in the swabs, they'll multiply themselves in the cells and their

DRESSES FOR OCCASION

Freehold, N.J. — (UPI) — Du-rrell Johnson, 22, in court to plead innocent to a breaking and entry indictment, explained to the judge why he showed up in tuxedo and black tie. "My lawyer said I should dress well out of respect for the court, so I borrowed the tuxedo," Johnson said.

presence can then be revealed. Can Stay in Deep Freeze It is common practice to freeze swabs until it is convenient to test them because it is well known many viruses can stay in deep-freeze indefinitely and resume their infective ways when they are thawed. Previous investigators of the monkey virus froze their swabs.

The Chicago scientists transferred the swabs from noses and throats to test tubes immediately. Of the 291 children, 183 were patients with respiratory infections which ranged from bad colds to lung involvement. Of these 183, the monkey virus was isolated from 41 in 48 variant forms. The remainder of the 291 children were patients for reasons other than respiratory infections. No monkey virus was isolated from any of them. Furthermore, the virus was found repeatedly in the respiratory tracts of some of the children with respiratory infections throughout the course of their illness, but it was not to be found when they had recovered.
