Operations for Strokes

Scores of people now write asking if they should have Grandfather operated on; "he had a stroke some months or years ago. In such a case, operation is, I should say, entirely out of the question. There are a certain few persons who have a peculiar type of stroke, due to the plugging-up of an artery in their neck, and it is they who can be operated on with some chance of success. In such case, if the man is to get any result, he should be studied by an artery expert, and operated on within perhaps hours or a week or two after what looks like a big stroke. Often these people have a peculiar experience which can be recognized by an expert. Many of them, for some weeks before the big stroke came, had been having symptoms which suggested the presence of a brain tumor. They had, perhaps, weakness and numbness in one arm, with perhaps occasional disturbance of vision, or of speech, with occasional dizziness.

The important point to remember is that operations are not to be performed on all people with the ordinary, common type of stroke which fells a man suddenly out of a clear sky and leaves him paralyzed on one side, and perhaps unable to talk. Also, operations are out of the question for someone who had his stroke weeks or months or years before. If a clot which formed in an artery is left in it for a while, it becomes so firmly fastened to the walls of the vessel that it cannot be removed. I guess I will have to keep emphasizing that operations for strokes are only for a percentage of these patients. Also the patient must, first, have a special type of x-ray study that only an expert can make; and, finally, the work must be done within a few days after the stroke. It is useless to write me about relatives who had a stroke long ago.

Safe Driving Awards Suggested

Minneapolis (AP)—Rewards should be given for safe driving as a means of promoting traffic safety, the Minnesota Automobile Association says. "It has been established that reward is far more effective than punishment," President E. Ray Cory said. "Yet there is no system of reward for safe driving."

However, he said, the American Automobile Association is conducting a study to determine if a practical means can be found for applying a rewards incentive to improve driving habits.

Strange As It Seems

es, the woman may spot; her breasts may become sore, and she may become nauseated. When I give Stilbestrol, I give only 0.5 milligram a day. Usually, this is enough, and it doesn't cause the distressing symptoms that can come with a 10 mg. dose.

Last year Dr. A. Valek reported on a study of 5118 persons in whose cases he compared the right or left-handedness of both parents with the right or left-handedness of the children. He concluded that the hand-preference of an individual is the result of both his inheritance and his early training at home. A left-handed father is particularly concerned to have his left-handed son learn to use his right hand, because he knows so well the difficulties that the boy will have to meet and overcome if he does not learn.
