Thyroid Hormone Found To Produce 'Instant Energy'

Los Angeles—(Science Service)—When you exercise strenuously your body may tap circulating blood reserves of thyroid hormone necessary to produce energy without the need of stopping up thyroid gland production.

This is the belief of Drs. J. Thomas Dowling and J. T. Nicolson of the University of California Medical School, Los Angeles, and Los Angeles VA Center, who have been studying transport of the hormone in the blood. (The hormone, thyroxine, is transported through the blood stream in a sort of "towing" operation by special proteins to which it is bound.)

Blood Samples Taken Human volunteers were asked by the doctors to run various distances. Samples of their blood were taken immediately after the exercise and again after they had rested. It was found that after they had run as little as 100 yards the binding of thyroxine to proteins was reduced considerably.

This suggested that a small portion of circulating thyroxine was suddenly "cut loose" from its "towing" proteins in order to meet sudden energy demands. Changes in the character of the blood, perhaps acids produced in the exercise process, are responsible for the "cutting loose" of the hormone. An hour after completion of the exercise binding and "towing" processes returned to normal.

Thus the body may meet temporary needs for thyroxine without sudden strains on the thyroid gland.

Ruling Limits Freedom of U.S. Scientists

Washington — (Science Service) — U.S. Government scientists are subject to a special State Department ruling limiting their freedom to attend meetings abroad, the journal Science charges editorially.

They are prevented from presenting papers at international meetings attended by scientists from countries not recognized diplomatically by the United States.

More Than Gain The editor of Science, Dr. Graham DuShane, points out that the U.S. stands to lose more than it gains by this policy. Any non-recognized country can block the attendance of our government scientists at an international meeting merely by sending a representative.

The International Council of Scientific Unions passed a resolution in 1958 affirming the right of scientists to participate in international scientific activity "without regard to race, religion, or political philosophy" and stating that such participation "has no implications with respect to recognition of the government of the country or territory concerned."

The governing board of the National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council endorsed this resolution in April, 1960.
