Another guest will be Mrs. Harold Strawn, Portland, president of the Oregon Federation of Republican Women. A surprise feature is also planned for the members.

Since this will be the last meeting of the group before election day, Mrs. Frank Bash, president, urges all women interested in Republican principles to attend. Luncheon reservations may be made by calling Mrs. L. Dow Inskip, Spring 3-1547, or Mrs. Ernest Ruegger, Spring 2-9958.

Historic Buildings Open For Annual Tea Sunday

Two historic Jacksonville landmarks, the Beckman bank and the McCully house, will be open for public visitation Sunday afternoon, October 16, when the Siskiyou Pioneer Sites foundation holds its second annual benefit tea in Jacksonville.

The tea, to which the public is invited, will be held at the McCully house from 3 until 5 p.m. Sunday, according to Mrs. Dwight Houghton, chairman for the event. No admission will be charged either for visits to the historic buildings or the tea, but donations may be made toward preservation of a third pioneer landmark, the United States hotel.

The Pioneer Sites foundation has worked toward preservation and restoration of the famous hotel for several years, and has held a number of public events to raise money for this purpose. On display at the tea Sunday will be architect's plans for the restoration of the hotel to its condition when it was visited by President Hayes in September, 1880. The plans were done by Jeffrey Shute of the R. J. Keeney architectural firm in Medford.

In conjunction with the event, memorial services for Jacksonville pioneers will be held in three historic churches Sunday, the Catholic church at 9 a.m., the Presbyterian church at 11 a.m., and the Methodist Episcopal church at 2 p.m.

Open House Honors Doles On Fiftieth Anniversary

The golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. James Dole was celebrated at an open house held at their home, 1756 Orchard Home drive, September 25. About 125 relatives and friends called between one and eight o'clock.

Hosts for the event were three of the Dole's children, Glen Dole, Redding, Calif., Mrs. William Gaines and Mrs. Joe Thomas, Medford. A second son, Paul Dole, McMinnville, Ore., was unable to be present.

For the open house Mrs. James Dole wore a silk frock of gold and brown and a corsage of gladioli and stephanotis.

A display of wedding pictures and other pictures taken during the couple's early married life provided interest for the event.

The Dole home was decorated with yellow chrysanthemums, gold colored gladioli and colorful autumn leaves.

Mrs. James Gordon, vocalist, and Mrs. Gaines at the organ provided background music, singing and playing old-time love songs.

Mr. and Mrs. Dole were married September 17, 1910, in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. Mr. Dole has been an employee of Red Blanket Lumber company for a number of years.

In Medford for the open house were Mr. and Mrs. Roy Rice, San Francisco; Mrs. Verona Vinson, sister of Mr. Dole from Corning, Calif.; Mrs. Elsie Dole, Renton, Wash.; Mr. and Mrs. Claude Shaw, Lebanon, Ore.; Keith Dole, a grandson from Redding; Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Jantzer and family, Dunsmuir, Calif.; and friends from Ashland, Phoenix, Grants Pass and Prospect.

Working Women Needed Say Business, Industry

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

Washington—UPI—"Symbol of the 1960s—More women at work."

This was the slogan the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's clubs chose for its annual week of tribute to the 23 million females in the nation's labor force.

But what would happen if there were fewer women at work, if women suddenly decided their place was in the home, if they no longer wanted to be that formidable combination of housekeeper, wife, mother, career woman and preferred role of "just a housewife?"

Leaders in business and industry say the result would be a shattering blow to the national economy.

"It would create a problem similar to the elimination of all electricity," was the way Alfred C. Thompson, president of the National Retail Merchants association and vice president of Miller and Rhoads, Richmond, Va., put it.

Thompson was one of several business and industry spokesmen asked, "What would happen if women suddenly decided their place was in the home?"

After all, some men still shout that's where we belong. And the working mother gets blamed for everything from juvenile crime to the divorce rate.

I frankly asked the question to gather material for a speech before the B and PW's District of Columbia federation.

Truthfully, I had hoped for some amusing answers, some tongue-in-cheek comment. Did I get any? No siree! The men consider women at work serious business. They want us, need us, love us.

G. Keith Funston, president of the New York Stock exchange, said simply that the world of finance wouldn't know what to do without women in a variety of jobs from secretaries to brokers.

Secretary of Labor James Mitchell didn't even consider a negative approach. To him, the working woman is here to stay; her opportunities in many fields continue to grow.

"Love Them Dear!"

"The effect of women not working would be felt in innumerable ways," said George Romney, president of American Motors, Detroit. "There would be an immediate shortage of workers. . . . The shortage would become even more acute before the end of the decade. . . . In some ways family life would be improved and juvenile delinquency reduced. But the level of economic activity would be reduced."

Enough to start all of us preening with pride are the words of praise from J. M. Freeman, assistant vice president of American Telephone and Telegraph company, the world's largest corporation.

"Today," he said, "there are more than 375,000 women working in the Bell System—more than half our total force. Some hold key executive posts. Others are engineers, employee advisors and commercial managers. Still more, of course, are supervisors and operators, secretaries and clerks."

"But whatever their jobs, the ladies are vital to our business. Let's face it. . . . We couldn't run it without them."

"Don't take our women out of plant and office, please," pleaded Dr. Austin Smith, president of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers association, representing an industry where women work both as scientists and secretaries.

"We need them desperately," said Smith, "but more than that, we love them dearly."

Tryouts Set For Tonight

First tryouts for the new Footlighter play, "Ghost Train" were held last night at the group's Fairgrounds theater. Frank Buchter, director for the forthcoming production, reports that he was pleased with the turnout and the first readings.

Casting will resume this evening. The play has a predominantly male cast and several of these roles have not been filled. Also, the director states that two important roles for women are not cast as yet.

The second tryouts will begin tonight at 8 o'clock at the little theater located back of the armory. Anyone interested is invited to attend.

Director Buchter believes that the play can go into production in late November.

Chrysanthemum Garden Toured

Shady Cove-Trail—Sixteen members and guests of the Shady Cove Garden club toured the Thompson chrysanthemum gardens in Central Point October 10. Those attending took sack lunches which were eaten outdoors in the gardens.

Guests present were Mrs. Ted Ball, Medford, and Mrs. Carolyn Kelsey, the Cottage Kitchen, Trail.

The monthly meeting will be held November 14 at the home of Mrs. Ivan Hale, Shady Cove. The subject will be "Small Greenhouses." Refreshments will be served and visitors are welcome.

November 4 the club will have a sale of plants and food in conjunction with the Lady Lions rummage sale in Shady Cove.

One hundred bands from high schools throughout California participated. Miss Rutledge is a clarinetist with the band. Including their band leader, Warren Behnke, and their chaperones, a total of 72 persons made the trip to Berkeley on chartered Greyhound buses.

POTPOURRI

"I hope Chief Champlin doesn't hear about this" said one of the news hens from The Mail Tribune as she rummaged through the shelves and cupboards of a certain home in Medford yesterday. The woman of the house wasn't home; and her husband was elsewhere, also.

But the situation was desperate, and the two determined women just kept on rummaging until they found what they wanted—silver and other necessities to set up a tea table for the annual reporter's school which the news hens give every fall.

The kind-hearted woman who had promised to loan the tea service, lace table cloth, etc., forgot to check her calendar. Wednesday morning and when a friend called and said "let's go pick teapots," she just left the breakfast dishes in the sink and went off to pick teapots. When she came home in the early afternoon she found a note scribbled on a paper sack in the kitchen which said "We took the supplies we needed" and the puzzled woman couldn't imagine for quite some time what in the world had been taken. When she remembered, she rushed madly off to the Red Cross building and sneaked into the kitchen, filled with remorse and apologies.

"All's well that ends well," is not only the name of a play and an old saying, it's also the truth. Everything did end well, and it's comforting to know that even someone whose reputation for efficiency extends from one end of the county to the other also forgets sometime.

The whole incident can be laid to fate. This kind-hearted, civic-minded woman went off to pick teapots and left the back door unlocked, something which she had not done in years. If the door had been locked, the women who came to the Tribune's class for reporters yesterday would have had their tea poured from aluminum pitchers at a bare table.—O.S.
