

LIVING AGAIN — Jerry Voltatotorni, 3, who was "dead on arrival," was restored to life at San Francisco in a daring surgery. The youngster was strangled by a sudden, massive throat inflammation. Surgeons opened his chest cavity, massaged his heart back into action, and performed a tracheotomy to permit him to breathe. The boy is still in serious condition. (UPI Telephoto)

Community College Problems Believed Being Ironed Out

By DOUGLAS GRIPP

Salem — (UPI) — Two sections of Oregon are concerned over birth of "area education districts" which would permit establishment of small colleges on the community level. But Oregon Education Department officials feel the problems are being ironed out.

Boundaries have been a major sore point in both the proposed Southwest Oregon and Central Oregon area education districts.

The State Board of Education hoped it had settled the dispute in Southwest Oregon last August by cutting some territory out of the proposed district that wanted to be excluded.

The designated area now includes all of Coos county, and fringe segments of Lane, Douglas and Curry counties. Josephine county wanted out and was not included. Most of Curry county was excluded, because of the distance factor.

Two property owners, one in Coos and the other in Curry, filed Circuit Court suits in September asking for the boundary decision to be voided. They claim that their property would not be benefited by inclusion in the district.

The Central Oregon district would be composed of Crook, Deschutes and Jefferson counties.

Jefferson County citizens said they wanted to know first where the school would be located, and whether they would have adequate representation on the district's board of directors, to be elected at large. Their point was that within the tri-county area the heaviest population is in one county — Deschutes.

Oscar Paulson, assistant superintendent for the education department's vocational and post-high school education division, said the counties are holding meetings among themselves and there appears to be "a meeting of the minds" forming.

Any area may form such a district if: (1) The area includes a property true cash value of at least $75 million, and (2) If 1,000 or more students are enrolled in secondary schools within the boundaries.

After the boundaries are approved, the next step is for the state board to call an election and voters within the district rule on the plan, also electing a five-man board of directors. This board passes on the property tax levy necessary to get the school started, studies site of the school and other problem.

The idea is to have the school located in the center of the area, easily accessible to all.

The community colleges are designed to offer a two-year course, including classes on the college transfer level plus vocational, terminal and adult evening classes.

Paulson says petitions are being circulated in Malheur County and the Huntington school district of Baker county for possible formation of a community college district in Eastern Oregon. Citizens in Tillamook and Clatsop counties are studying the possibilities in their areas, he said.
