Rural Reflections

By MAUDE ZIEGLER

Applegate Valley - A whopping buck story was shown up, and Rita Fossen believes it an especially good one because she nabbed her buck amidst envious glances from passersby with practically no effort. In fact the buck waited for her to go home and get her gun and license.

As Rita and Jim Fossen returned from town one afternoon they saw a doe and buck standing in the field at the Clarence Buck ranch about three miles from their home. Rita recognized her chance and soon was back with her gun. She says it was a big buck, but it would be only a husband who would point out that he was a three legged deer and probably couldn't run very fast. One leg was gone below the knee, but long since healed over and well padded. Rita was still wearing her street clothes when she made her kill, while appropriately dressed hunters drove by empty handed.

Increasing Enrollments May Create Space Problem

Happy Camp-Rising school enrollments are likely to create space problems for Happy Camp schools in the future.

Herb Sonneborn, elementary school principal, said rising enrollments are going to create a problem of where to put the students in the near future. In speaking at a recent elementary school board meeting, Sonneborn pointed out that one eighth grade class is now meeting in the school cafeteria. Elementary enrollments have risen to 334, he said.

Hugh Wright, school board clerk, reported on a Master Plan now being used in California. The plan calls for dividing schools into smaller districts, he said. Wright explained that one possible solution to the expansion problem would be to make the present high school into a junior high.

He suggested that the high school would be eligible for state aid, thus allowing for a new high school to be built. The school board asked Sonneborn to contact Carl Hoberg, superintendent of the Siskiyou county school district, to see what steps would have to be taken if this plan were adopted.
