Small Worlds Around Us By Lynn M. Watkins

Few Myths Concerning Creatures of Wild Survival. Machines, yes, but the present generation will leave to posterity few myths and legends concerning the little creatures of the wild which we have had the privilege of enjoying. But few superstitions can be built up around a machine. Several decades ago, without TV, the motor car or a thousand other things which we are familiar in this so-called modern world, people lived pretty close to the field and the forest, and they noticed the actions of the creatures of the wild, and adjusted their own actions to those of the creatures that lived close to them.

The actions of birds and animals warned the early pioneers of changing weather conditions. People planted crops in accordance with natural manifestations. Corn was planted (even in today in some sections) when the leaves of the oak tree were the size of a squirrel's ear. When the same squirrel worked assiduously to put aside a heavy store of nuts, the people prepared for "a cold winter."

San Francisco - (UPI) - A vandal here figured out a new way to disarm police. He broke into a locked room at the Youth Guidance Center and cut the arms and pants legs off two nearly-new uniforms belonging to deputies of the San Francisco sheriff's office.
