Russian Women Eager For "Liquid of Youth"

(Editor's Note: Russian women are awakening to beauty—and the cosmetics, drugs and other means of achieving or preserving it. UPI Moscow correspondent Aline Mosby reports, in a three-part series, on what Soviet women are doing and using to make themselves younger and more attractive looking.)

Moscow—(UPI)—For 60 cents in Moscow you can buy a "liquid of youth" that some Russian doctors hope might take years off your face.

Aline Mosby

Many doctors both here and abroad are doubtful. But nonetheless Russian women—and many foreign women who hear about it—are eager customers at Polyclinic No. 6 on Herzen St. in expectation of dissolving a few years from their looks.

The "elixir" actually is a solution of "2 per cent Novocain," says the box, borrowing a western brand name for the drug procaine, the local anesthetic you take in the dentist's chair.

Romanian Inventor
This is one invention the Russians don't claim. A 61-year-old Romanian woman professor, Anna Aslan, began using the drug nine years ago in Bucharest to "rejuvenate" patients. European and American doctors issued medical reports saying they had no proof that H3, as it's called, is other than a good anesthetic. But doctors still are giving the H3 shots here and looking for some results.

I visited the "fountain of youth" polyclinic with the wife of an Italian diplomat who was a patient.

"I heard about this from an Intourist guide," she explained. "Many embassy wives are going."

The polyclinic looks like all Russian clinics, or hospitals, housed in a simple yellow-and-white building on a busy business street. Only a small black plaque saying "Polyclinic No 6" distinguishes it from surrounding shops and offices.

Reception Room
Inside a few young girls in white uniforms clustered around a reception table they directed us to the usual cloakroom where you must check your coat. Then we were led down a hall to a doctor's office.

The doctor, a woman as are most doctors in Russia, was a heavy, handsome blonde with a white kerchief over her hair and a white uniform over her print dress. She tested my friend's blood pressure, took a blood test and gave her a prescription for M3. You can purchase the capsules at any drugstore for six rubles, or 60 cents on the tourist exchange rate. You take the capsules to the hospital to be given the injections.

The hospital trips are free, even to foreigners.

"We've been giving these shots since 1953," the doctor said. "Frankly we haven't received as good results as we hoped. But blood pressure, circulation and skin tone improves."

"Many Chinese women come here the minute they get off the plane from Peking."

81-Year-Old Woman Works For World-Wide Literacy

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor
New York—(UPI)—Mrs. Frederick B. Fisher, going on 81 years, is a tireless worker for a cause—that those who can't read and write be taught how.

"If we offer the underdeveloped peoples only carpet sweepers and washing machines, we won't win them," said Mrs. Fisher in an interview. "America must take up the cudgel for literacy. If people can't read and write, how can you lift their economy?"

A pep assembly was held Friday, Oct. 14, to give the Pointers support for the North Grants Pass football game. The yell leaders led the pupils in six yells. Our band, led by Harry Meyers, entertained us with four musical numbers.

"We've lived to see the backward nations push forward," she said. "Now, we in America have to decide—are we going to be the human beings who to these people represent God and love and truth and guidance?"

"Literacy is the first door you open . . . from it, people learn how to improve sanitary conditions . . . how to build a road . . . how to improve their agriculture. A major problem in many parts of the world is simply how to get more food out of an acre of land."

Mrs. Fisher, a tall energetic woman who resembles the late Ethel Barrymore, has toted her private "cudgel" for literacy for more than half a century. Carrying it has taken her around the world at least nine times, "not counting numerous side trips to the Middle East, to South America, and to Africa," she said.

She is the founder and president of World Education, Inc., a non-denominational organization supported by private contribution and foundation grants. It supports Literacy Village, which she established nearly eight years ago at Lucknow, India, 380 miles from Delhi.

Literacy Village's major purpose is to train teachers, who in turn go into the hinterlands to teach reading, writing and other skills to villagers. Literacy Village already has trained 5,000 teachers, she said.

It also, through a Ford Foundation grant, has set up a school for writing to compile books in the various Indian dialects on subjects varying from citizenship to farming. And there are special night courses for teen-agers and the early 20s group— "within two years of meeting six nights a week, we can have the students passing their fifth grade exams," she said.

Minty Fruit Sauce
Leg of lamb and mint jelly are natural partners, but for an extra treat add canned fruit cocktail. Drain cocktail and heat gently with mint jelly; serve warm with lamb. Don't discard the fruit cocktail syrup—save to add flavor to puddings. Use it in place of one-half the quantity of milk.

Hurry-Up Casserole
Take a can of fruit cocktail, one of luncheon meat and another of sweet potatoes or yams and put them together for a hurry-up whole-meal casserole. Drain syrup from fruit cocktail and add 3 tablespoons brown sugar, teaspoon prepared mustard and dash cloves. Arrange alternate layers of sliced meat, potatoes and fruit cocktail in baking dish or pan. Spoon on syrup mixture and bake in moderate oven about 30 minutes. Slip a pan of corn bread into the oven to bake along with the casserole. Toss green salad with zesty dressing, and dinner is ready.

Along with the olives, we like to stir in instant minced onion and bits of green pepper. Served with crisp bacon, warm sweet rolls and coffee, these Calico Eggs are delicious.
