Historical Novel On Club Program

"A Distant Trumpet," an historical, romantic novel by Paul Horgan, was the book chosen by Mrs. Geraldine Mitchell for review at the recent Wednesday Study club meeting.

The story, partly fictional and partly factual, deals with the Civil and Indian wars in 1880 and has its beginning in and is affected by forces arising out of the Civil War. The chief scene of action is an army outpost, Fort Delivery, on the Indian frontier of Arizona and New Mexico, near Tucson.

Mrs. L. K. Doty reviewed "Folk Medicine," by Dr. D. C. Jarvis, a graduate of the University of Vermont, who specialized in eye, nose and throat. The story is "a bag full of health secrets which prolong life and gives vigor to young and old, using herbs and roots in the treatment and prevention of ills."

Money Management Theme of Booklet

New York - (UPI) - New on the economic front is a booklet which admits what most women already know - it's mighty hard to follow a budget.

But rather than give up and spend, spend, the publication suggests "modern techniques of money management." Planned spending, rather than the frustration of "old-fashioned" budgets, is what Sidney Margolius suggests in "How to Stretch Your Money," published by the Public Affairs Committee, a non-profit educational organization.

Margolius made these suggestions for plugging the spending leak on food alone: -Plan your menus around seasonally abundant foods and advertised specials.

-Serve fewer and larger courses to enable bulk buying and the use of large packages instead of costlier small ones.

-Use standard grades (B or C) instead of Grade A or so-called "fancy" qualities. They are the same nutritionally.

Fancy Casserole

New York - (UPI) - Leftover roast pork is the basis for a fancy casserole, krait franchise. Combine one 10 1/2-ounce can of condensed onion soup with 3 cups of diced cooked pork and 1 teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce. Mix lightly.

Turn 3 1/2 cups of undrained sauerkraut into a greased 2 1/2-quart casserole. Top with pork mixture and 2 medium apples, cored and thinly sliced. Bake uncovered in 350 degree oven 30 minutes. Serves 4 to 6.

In order to get a smoother and flatter seam appearance on the right side of garments, notch the edges that curve out and clip the edges that curve in.

Moscow Now Approves Use Of Makeup; Said Plentiful

(Editor's note: This is the second of a series of articles about the increasing use of beauty aids and cosmetics by women in Russia.)

By ALINE MOSBY United Press International Moscow - (UPI) - Now that cosmetics are in favor in Russia, Mrs. Moscow keeps up her looks with everything from cold cream containing vodka to eyebrow pencils.

Not too many years ago lipstick was scarce and most women marching toward Communism preferred the 100 per cent natural look. Only faint use of makeup is approved now, but cosmetics are cheap and plentiful in department stores and every sidewalk stand.

Young girls are the main customers around the crowded cosmetic counters in GUM, the Macy's of Moscow, where you can buy cleansing cream in tubes with such names as "Lanolin" and "Almond" for 30 cents at the tourist exchange rate.

Lipstick Purple For five rubles, or 50 cents, I bought whitish face powder called "Moscow" in a red box, about half the size of an American box, and decorated with views of the Kremlin. Lipstick was 10 rubles, or $1.

There's no advertising in the Soviet Union to warn you a husband won't be yours unless you curl your eyelashes. But the few women's magazines here include beauty articles, now that Soviet females want to look pretty as well as run tractors.

One article in Soviet Women suggests a do-it-yourself face cream: Beat one egg yolk; add glass of cream, juice of one lemon, ounce of vodka. It sounds like a golden fizz, but put it on your face.

Cosmetics counters feature limited brands and are modest by western standards. But whoever runs the perfume trust must have overfulfilled his seven-year plan already. Department stores in Moscow devote easily three times the space to perfumes as the average western store. The scents come in packages with tassels, colored paper and even bottles shaped like a Kremlin tower.

Men in this country of strict Communist morality are not dragged into danger with such perfume titles as "My Sin." The Russians more staidly call theirs "Red Moscow," "Sputnik," "Evening" and "Stone Flower." Russian perfumes seem to me heavy and sweet.

However, one day a Moscow newspaper proudly proclaimed, "Russian perfumes are better than French perfumes." I also sampled Russian toothpaste. It is tasteless and makes no claim to whiten, deodorize or do away with cavities.

Costume Suit Good For Spring

New York - (UPI) - New York's fashion industry so overwhelmingly endorses the costume that the two-piece suit for spring may become passe.

Instead, we'll shop for four combinations - dress plus coat, dress plus jacket, skirt plus jacket plus blouse, or skirt plus coat plus blouse.

Costumes far outdid the traditional two-piece suit in collections shown last week by top designers to the nation's store buyers. One of the stars was the three-piece suit with belted overblouse. Jackets on these were loose in silhouette, often with large vents, and in length fell to the waist or a couple of inches below.

One firm, Branel, carried the costume look into dress-sweater sets for daytime, showing matching trimmed cashmere sweaters over linen or silk dresses.

Designer Ceil Chapman used bulky cardigan sweaters as evening wraps for both short and long formal sheaths. Edward Beckham, designer for the new high style firm of Paul Blumenthal, showed a group of collarless coats in brilliant solid shades topping printed silk dresses in coordinated shades.

Bill Blass, chief designer at Maurice Rentner, liked the skirt - blouse - coat costume done in unusual fabric and color combinations. He teamed pale shades of wool over linen, and combined lime green with bright blue.

The costume proved just as popular for after-five as for daytime. At Edward Abbott's, cocktail outfits looked prim and covered up until the jackets were removed to show slim dresses with revealing tops.

Other highlights from the spring collections: -Culotte dresses showed in fabrics for all hours. Other dresses for late day came with high turtle necks at the front, but sliced to a deep V or U at the back. Daytime dresses had a longer waisted look, and there was a lot of bias cut to give them a flowing look. Sleeve treatment ranged from the sleeveless, through cap, raglan and lantern.

-Dresses with one shoulder bare, the other covered, appeared in both sportswear and late day clothes.

-Coat sleeves were bulky looking, some with cape-like backs, straight columns with side vents, or princess-shaped to the front of the body.

-Bright pink proved a hit for spring '61, but there also were plenty of bright blues, pale mauves, apricot and peach shades and the beige.

Chicago - These shoes displayed at the National Shoe Fair in Chicago are described as "heel-less." Looking at the fancy curves which take the place of straight line heels is C. E. Streeter. Thousands of shoe styles for spring and summer are being shown at the fair. (UPI Telephoto)

Metropolitan Opera Opens Season On Religious Note

By FREDERICK M. WINSHIP United Press International

New York - (UPI) - The Metropolitan Opera revived an impressive but neglected Verdi in a sestet, "Nabucco," Monday night to open a season which promises to be one of the finest in the Met's 76-year history.

One of the most sedate opening night throngs in years paid a record of $81,482 to see the 128-year-old work of Verdi's youth, last produced here in 1848. Orchestra seats were $45, up $5 over last year.

Every seat was filled when conductor Thomas Schippers gave the downbeat for the overture - a tribute to general manager Rudolf Bing's 11-year campaign against the circus aspects of opening nights.

Later in the season, Manager Bing will treat his patrons to new productions of "Alceste," with the celebrated soprano Eileen Farrell making her Met debut, "Turandot," with sets and costumes by Cecil Beaton, "Marta," and "L'elisir d'amore."

The religious tone of Monday night's offering, a drama concerning the Babylonian captivity of the Jews, caught and held the audience throughout its seven scenes.

The revival of "Nabucco" established the American baritone, Cornell MacNeil, as one of the Met's solidest talents. His interpretation of the title role of Nebuchadnezzar was powerful both musically and dramatically. He proved a worthy successor to the great Leonard Warren, who was assigned to the role before his death last March.

It was no news to Met patrons that Leonie Rysanek, the Austrian soprano who joined the company in 1958, is capable of thrilling vocal feats. But her complete mastery of the murderous arias which Verdi wrote for the role of Abigail, unsurpassed in the Verdian repertoire, evoked the evening's loudest bravo as high C followed high C.

Commonly used dishwashing and laundry detergents rarely are the primary factor in the disease, a nine-year study showed. When other factors of the household routine were removed, doctors found that daily immersion of hands in soaps and detergents was not harmful.

Hospitalized patients with skin diseases and others with normal skin were studied to determine the effect of cleansers on both. Results showed the products "rarely provoke allergic reactions" nor is their alkalinity damaging.

Emotional adjustment, previous skin problems, winter weather, and chemical agents such as food juices, dyes and solvents were listed among probable causes of the disease.

The medical department began the study, Dr. Suskind said, because for years "soap dermatitis" was a "glib and frequent diagnosis for a variety of skin problems of the hands."
