Three Scientists Named Winners 1960 Heart Award

New York—(Science Service)—The three pioneering scientists who revolutionized treatment of heart patients by developing and prescribing anticoagulant drugs were named joint winners of the 1960 Albert Lasker Award of the American Heart Association here.

Anticoagulant drugs, given to slow down clotting time and prevent clot formation in blood vessels, can reduce the heart attack death rate by one-third.

For their work in this field, the scientists sharing the award are: Dr. Karl Paul Link, professor of biochemistry, University of Wisconsin; Dr. Irving S. Wright, professor of clinical medicine, Cornell University Medical College, New York; and Dr. Edgar V. Allen, senior consultant in medicine, Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn.

Link's research goes back 20 years to the time when cattle were bleeding to death after they ate spoiled sweet clover. The fatal ingredient in the clover, Link discovered, is dicoumarin.

After providing an antidote for the cattle, he went on to synthesize dicoumarol, the first orally administered anticoagulant.

Medical History

Wright made medical history in 1938 by becoming the first physician in the U.S. to treat a patient with heparin, the intravenously administered anticoagulant. He later advanced the clinical use of dicoumarol and was among the first to use and advocate anticoagulants for treatment of heart attacks and strokes. The first large-scale cooperative study of anticoagulant therapy for coronary thrombosis, inspired and coordinated by Wright, resulted in wide medical adoption of this treatment.

Allen, who foresaw the clinical possibilities of dicoumarol long before they had been proved, was among the first to test the drug in the laboratory and then to use it clinically. In 1941, the same year Link announced the synthesis of dicoumarol, Dr. Allen's laboratory team released the first published report on the administration of this drug to human beings.

The awards were presented at the American Heart Association's St. Louis, Mo., meeting recently. Each investigator received an honorarium of $2,500, an illuminated scroll, and a gold statuette of The Winged Victory of Samothrace, symbolizing victory over death and disease.

KOG Trustees Are Named in Portland

Portland—Jack H. Wood, assistant regional U.S. forester and former supervisor of Rogue River National forest, is one of two new members of the Keep Oregon Green board of trustees.

Wood and James B. Corlett, manager of the Oregon Forest Protection association, were named at a special meeting of the KOG board here.

They fill vacancies caused by the deaths recently of Carl Hersey and Larry Jolley. Jolley also is a former supervisor of Rogue River National forest.

The board approved formation of a special Carl Hersey Memorial Fund dedicated to some Oregon Green Guard activity. The fund was suggested by Edmund Hayes, Miss Corrine Woodruff was named treasurer, filling a vacancy left when Hersey died.
