Back Stairs: President Loves Parades

By WILLIAM J. EATON

Washington – (UPI) – Back stairs at the White House: President Eisenhower loves a parade, especially when he's the center of it.

This has been increasingly evident to reporters who have observed the chief executive receive the accolades of millions from Minnesota to Mexico and New York to San Diego.

He has worked out four basic responses to acknowledge the crowds' salute. These consist of the V-for-victory signal, the thumbs-up symbol, the boxer's triumphal two-handed grip and the "double whammy."

The last-named gesture is the one most associated with Eisenhower-the-campaigner. Both arms are raised straight upward from the shoulder and the hands seem to reach for the sky. It rarely fails to evoke a roar from any group.

Supplementary Maneuver

Motorcading through New York, the President often adds a supplementary maneuver from his stand-up position in an open car. This is the lean-back, a reverse twist to recognize cheers from spectators perched high in skyscraper office windows.

The President has used as many as six different modes of transportation in one day on the road. During his recent trip to the West Coast, for example, he traveled by jet, helicopter, car, foot, navy launch and golf cart.

Big Comedown

Both the chief executive and the White House correspondents suffered a big comedown in the transportation field at the conclusion of his nine-day cross-country speaking tour. The President dropped from a 707 jet to a two-engined convair and the reporters shifted from their even newer 720 jet to the old workhorse of the airways, the DC-3, to visit Staunton, Va. The airfield was to small to accommodate a bigger plane.

The job future of many White House stenographers and secretaries is doubtful, to say the least, in view of the change in administration next January 20. One schedule of Saturday work, made out far in advance, shows only a "?" for the Saturday after inaugural day.

Eisenhower's naval aide, Capt. E. P. Aurand, gets an "E" for effort by White House observers for his dutiful promotion of Navy events. In recent weeks Aurant has scored by getting the President to attend a Navy football game and tour the naval installation at North Island, San Diego. The Navy publicist for the base has a sense of humor. He said it was "not north of anything in particular and not an island."

The Family Council

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, three editors and a women's editor. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

James V. – Now that the struggle is over, he suddenly appears.

Otto V. – I got a terrible deal. Jim's won't let me explain.

* * *

James V. – I'm 40 years old and for the first half of my life I grew up thinking both my parents were dead. I was raised by my grandmother, my mother's mother. She died when I was 20, and had just started in business with one of my uncles.

When I started taking girls out and was thinking of marriage, one of my aunts took me aside and said the family had agreed to tell me the truth. My father was alive, remarried, and living in a distant state. He had divorced my mother shortly after my birth and she had died, when only 20, of a "broken heart."

Naturally this knocked me for a loop. I decided to contact my father and get the story from him. I wanted to clear matters up before bringing a wife into the picture.

He was overjoyed, promptly sent me his picture, asked for mine and enclosed a large check with a request that I visit him. He informed me that he and his second wife were childless, he had prospered in the paper-box business and was now retired, and I was his only heir.

I didn't jump at the bait. I still don't, even though I'm married now and have three children. My wife knows the background and understands my reluctance to act like a "real son" when I don't feel like one at all.

My father and his wife travel to our town several times a year, ply us with gifts, try to make me warm up to them.

* * *

Otto V. – Jim can't understand that I was victimized. You'd think now that he's a father himself he'd listen to me with an open mind.

I'm from the old country and I had no sooner landed when my family told me they had pledged me in marriage to a beautiful girl whose father would take me right into his tailoring business. I was 17 years old, although I looked older. In those days no matter what was wrong with a girl, the parents and relatives were sure that marriage and a few children would cure it.

It turned out that Jim's mother had tried to kill herself. She was extremely unhappy and today would have been in the care of a psychiatrist. Unfortunately, I was no cure for her. After becoming pregnant she fled to her mother's home and wouldn't let me near her. She screamed at the sight of me. With the aid of my family, I fled and got a divorce.

I've made a new life. I don't know how much of the past I ought to be blamed for. I know Jim must have had it drilled into him that I was a terrible person, heartless and false and the rest. Now I want to show him my true self. But he freezes up.

Doesn't he realize the importance of a blood tie?

* * *

The Council: Mr. V. should take heart from the fact that Jim initiated their person-to-person introduction to each other. But a hurt of almost 30 years doesn't vanish overnight at the waving of a bankroll.

Jim is playing it cautious and cool. To him this isn't a question of letting bygones be bygones. He wants to feel his way for something basic to get hold of, something solid to build on. His bewilderment is deep-rooted and a mere pronouncement of paternal interest doesn't affect it.

But the road to a real relationship is open and it's two-way. That's progress. Now Jim ought to quit being punitive. Whatever the true facts, Jim would do well to stop sitting in judgment and try to view his father as a plain human being, a man who has had his trials and has come through them with more or less success. Under similar provocation, would Jim himself have done better? Who's to say?

And Mr. V. might stop pushing so hard. It will certainly dawn on Jim one of these days that he and his family are fortunate to have these older people on tap, welling over with love for the only descendants they'll ever have. One doesn't turn away lightly a blood relative, no matter how many tears have flowed in between. But Mr. V. must try to coast for a while on the momentum of his efforts up to now.

Jim knows he's in the power seat and his father is a suppliant trying to right a wrong, with time running out. Perhaps he'll be able to see them each as more or less innocent victims of family mistakes.
