Court Discusses Possibility of Another Trapper

The Jackson county court yesterday briefly discussed the possibility of using accumulated bounty money for hiring a second government trapper.

County Commissioner Ralph James said he had talked to Riley Patterson, Roseburg, U. S. fish and wildlife service, who suggested the county court hire a second trapper if it decided against the poison bait program.

The county court has yet to make its decision on setting out poison bait stations containing Compound 1080.

Another suggestion mentioned was increasing the bounty on coyotes from $5 to $7 a head.

The county has $3,000 left in the budget for bounties. It originally budgeted $4,500. The bounty allowance was increased considerably two years ago to control porcupines which were becoming a public nuisance in the county.

Comparatively few porcupine noses are being brought in to the county clerk's office, James said.

Friday night, a public meeting was held on the proposed poison bait program. Patterson explained the purpose of the program, and said he proposed to set out at least eight and not more than 12 coyote poisoning stations in the Lake Creek area toward the head of Salt Creek.

The county court was presented 18 petitions with signatures of 849 people opposing the program. A number of the approximately 50 people attending the meeting also opposed the poison bait stations.

Ruling Enables Postman to Whistle

East Paterson, N.J.—Simon Gutkin, a mailman, likes to whistle while he works. It took a ruling from Postmaster Charles Roth to permit Gutkin to keep on whistling.

Gutkin ran into difficulty when a resident complained that the notes issuing from the mailman's lips were bothering his dog. The resident said that the whistling made the dog angry and that it might bite someone, perhaps the mailman. As a result, an assistant postmaster told Gutkin to stop whistling on his rounds.

He quite whistling but it brought on protests from other persons on his route. The dispute was settled to the satisfaction of all with the ruling that Gutkin could continue whistling if he toned it down at the house with the dog.
