Food Preservation Procedure Differs

Washington, (Science Service) - Antibiotics for food preservation are more widely used in the United States than in Great Britain because only 18 per cent of the homes of Britain have refrigeration. Antibiotics alone will not keep food safe.

Dr. Herbert S. Goldberg of the University of Missouri medical school reported this to the Conference on Anti-Microbial Agents here after spending a year in England at the University of Cambridge.

Moon Oxygen Lack May Mean Defects

St. Louis (Science Service) - Female earth colonizers of the moon may have to return to earth to bear normal young because of insufficient oxygen.

The minimum for survival probably will not be enough oxygen to produce normal young on the moon, Drs. Bernard Baird and Sherburne E. Cook of the University of California, Berkeley, reported to the American Heart association meeting here.

The scientists based their conclusion on research with mice that showed a significant number of inborn heart defects among mice born to mothers exposed to an oxygen-poor atmosphere.

Although the mice were given enough oxygen for comfortable survival, the amounts still proved inadequate for normal reproduction. Pregnant mice exposed only six hours daily to oxygen-poor atmospheres at high altitudes, 20,000 feet, produced 99 young. Twelve had cardiovascular malformations. No defects were observed among 391 mice bred at sea level.

Mr. Johnson was born Sept. 30, 1883, in Carthage, Mo., and had lived in southern Oregon for the past 38 years. He was married Nov. 21, 1911, in Richfield, Wash., to Hannah Elizabeth Nelson, who survives.

Ike Says Kennedy Is Too Impetuous To Make Decisions

Pittsburgh-UPB - President Eisenhower ended his campaign travels Friday night by picturing Sen. John F. Kennedy as too "rash" and "impetuous" to make world peace decisions in the White House.

Eisenhower told a nationwide TV audience his eight years as chief executive had convinced him that Vice President Richard M. Nixon was better prepared to combat the Communists and preserve U.S. economic strength.

He said a Democratic victory at the polls next Tuesday would bring either skyrocketing federal taxes, higher prices or cheap dollars.

The President returned to Washington Friday night after deriding Kennedy as a "young genius" and questioning the Democratic candidates judgment in hard-hitting speeches in Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

After Ohio Votes
The one-day tour was an attempt to capture for Nixon Ohio's 25 electoral votes and Pennsylvania's 32-vote prize. Eisenhower stumped in New York Wednesday with the Republican nominee in a bid for that state's 45 votes—biggest single bloc in the nation.

The President displayed his crowd-pulling power again. He drew an estimated 50,000 persons in Cleveland, scores of thousands in Pittsburgh's "Golden Triangle" area and hundreds of thousands in a New York motorcade. The cities are traditional Democratic strongholds.

Republicans hoped the President's popularity could be converted into votes for Nixon.

"I'll always remember this as my last political trip," the President said as he left Pittsburgh airport. "It was wonderful."

He will make his final campaign pitch for Nixon in an election-eve TV broadcast from Washington Monday night.
