

DEVOTED TO HELPING—Sylvia Adler, 21, of Brooklyn, N.Y., coaxes Susan McKendry, 5, to try a few halting steps, supported by parallel bars. Sylvia is a senior in physical therapy at the New York University College of Medicine. Both she and little Susan were born with the serious defect of an open spine. This has led Sylvia to devote her life to helping handicapped children. (UPI Telephoto)

Therapist Born With Major Defect Assists Handicapped

New York—(UPI)—Pretty blonde Sylvia Adler, 21, who walks just a little stiff-legged, will be graduated as a physical therapist this fall from the New York University College of Medicine.

She's a rare example of a youngster born with a major body defect who has overcome it sufficiently, not only to lead a normal life, but to be able to put her intimate knowledge of pain and discomfort—and the value of determination—to work for other handicapped children.

Born With Open Spine
Miss Adler was born with an open spine, an embryological failure which leaves the spinal nerves exposed, frequently irretrievably damaged. Disability may range from a comparatively minor paralysis of the feet to complete paralysis of the lower body.

The anomaly is one of the major birth defects into which the National Foundation is presently financing research to find causes and cures. Others are hydrocephalus, which is water on the brain, and encephalocele, or open skull.

Miss Adler's education has in part been financed by foundation scholarship, but she won that with no quarter for her physical disability.

Training Not Unusual
It is not unusual for handicapped persons to seek training to help others more severely handicapped, medical authorities said. But no one can be admitted to physical therapy training who cannot fulfill all the training requirements. Miss Adler cannot handle heavy adults, but has no problem with 85 per cent of the cases she might be called upon to work with.
