Move Started To Save Teeth of Elizabeth Taylor

London—UPI—Doctors began a fight today to save Elizabeth Taylor's teeth in what amounted to a battle to preserve her beauty as the world now knows it.

A team of physicians aided by dental experts studied X-rays to determine how best to avoid any extractions which might subtly alter the shape of the lovely mouth of the world's highest paid feminine film star.

Sources at the London clinic where Miss Taylor was reported resting "fairly comfortably" this morning said they were hopeful that if they could not avoid extractions completely they might have to pull only one tooth.

However, if the infection is unusually resistant or widespread it might be necessary to extract more.

In this case the most skillful dentistry would be needed to maintain the fabulously photogenic face exactly as it is—especially since today's giant-sized screens exaggerate even the slightest imperfection.

Deportation Cases Still Under Study

Washington—UPI—The Immigration Service told the office of Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) Tuesday that it was still studying the deportation case involving two Portland, Ore., men.

The U.S. Supreme Court Monday denied an appeal of Hamish Scott MacKay and William A. Mackie, who have been fighting deportation for years.

An aide to Morse said an immigration official advised him they would have to give further study to the court's decision. The official said Morse's office would be advised of any deportation action before it was taken.

Justices Hugh Black and William O. Douglas disagreed in the high court's decision.

Fierce Lover Could Become Fierce Hater

Dallas, Tex.—UPI—Justice of the Peace Bill Richburg agreed that the woman needed protection, and put her, a boyfriend and a former suitor under peace bonds today of $1,000 each.

But before he reached the decision, he asked: "How do you know he (the ex-boyfriend) will hurt you?" "Well, he said he could hate just as well as he could love," she answered. "And judge," she was a real fierce lover.

reading lesson in which their child participated. Some of the classes had also prepared short dramatizations of favorite stories.

The educational display in the school library received much attention and favorable comment. Because better informed parents help produce better education for their children, American Education Week was a profitable time at Jewett school.

Expressions of satisfaction and accomplishment were mirrored on the faces of the youngsters in Mrs. Foote's and Mrs. Bowers' first grade room at Jewett school Tuesday, Nov. 8, when they staged a mock election.

The children had registration cards which they presented in order to vote, and the election board then checked them off on their registered voters list. They then voted secretly in the two voting booths and deposited their ballots in the ballot box.

Later the ballots were tabulated by the counting board. This has been a several weeks project in each room and a bulletin board "Who will be President" which included Kennedy's and Nixon's pictures and the American flag was on display for six weeks.

Preceding election day the youngsters studied about elections and secret ballots. As a result of this study they realize that as Americans they will support a man for office and will then accept and be happy with the result.
