CARE Program Explained; Local Club Aids Project

"Contributions to CARE will buy a self-help program, which gives people the tools to help themselves," states Mrs. Fred C. Gast, president of the Oregon Federation of Women's clubs.

Travel Study club, of the Oregon Federation, will have a CARE benefit tea Monday, November 21, at the Girl's Community club, from 2 to 4 o'clock. Both men and women are invited. Music and speakers are planned during the afternoon.

Latin American countries are being aided by the Federated clubs this year.

"CARE is extending its program to education through community development, which gets down to the basic problems so many Latin American countries face today," Mrs. E. Lee Osburn, President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs has said. She also states, "you can establish a person-to-person link with Latin America, proving that we want to help. This program, through the organization of 'CARE', will meet immediate needs and plans for the future, showing that North Americans are concerned about their South American neighbors."

By the help given from the "CARE" program, primitive methods of land cultivation may be changed from wooden, planting sticks to the use of simple, modern tools; vocational training will be given to furnish such basic skills as carpentry and masonry; educational programs will be instituted to combat the crippling effects of illiteracy; trained personnel will give urgently needed instruction in fundamental health measures.

In many of the rural districts, the people live in huts that have mud floors and thatched roofs; sanitation facilities are poor, and there is no heating system. This applies to all Latin American countries.

"Education through community development is stressed by the Travel Study club, as a means to build foundations for peace and democracy in Latin America", states Mrs. Jack D. Brummond, president of the club.

"CARE" boxes will be available in the United States National bank, First National bank, Karis Shoe store, and Summit grocery, Tuesday, November 22, through Saturday, November 26.

Thursday, December 1, the club will hold a rummage sale in the Fehl Building, to raise funds for the "CARE" program.

"Oedipus" Set Tonight

Ashland - The SOC Reading theatre, which planned originally to prepare a reading production of Sophocles' great tragedy, "Oedipus, The King," for the world literature classes at the college, decided to open the reading to the public as there are few opportunities today to see performances of Greek plays or hear them read.

The production will be given tonight at 8:30 o'clock in Churchill hall auditorium.

Staged as "a concert reading" in somewhat the same manner as the performances of the famous Drama Quartet of several seasons ago, the reading features members of the SOC Faculty. The production, which lasts about an hour, will be presented without intermissions or curtain calls. No one will be seated after the reading begins in order that the mood of the play might be preserved.

There is no admission charge.

Fifty Plus Club Announces Meeting

The Fifty Plus club will meet Friday, November 18, at the St. Mark's Episcopal church guild hall at 12:30 p.m. Those attending are to take a sack lunch.

David Abel, young violinist from San Francisco, will appear in concert Saturday, November 19, at Medford High school auditorium under the sponsorship of Jackson County Civic Music association. The concert is set for 8 p.m. The young musician, who has appeared as soloist with many of the nation's leading symphony orchestras, has just completed a tour with the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra during which 27 concerts were presented.

We aren't really the Pollyanna type, but the business of having to coddle a broken foot does have some "silver lining." We've been reading more, and yesterday actually managed to find time to paste a whole book of trading stamps. (We're of two minds about trading stamps—on one hand they are a great big nuisance, and on the other hand, we're too thrifty to refuse to accept them at the stores.)

Yesterday we went through four or five issues of the Christian Science Monitor while resting the injured foot. We spied an article with a Guatemala City dateline, and since our friend, Margaret Schuler is so recently home from there, we read the material, written by a teacher named Don Wilcox. Mr. Wilcox has been a teacher in the American school, and says that in his opinion, the most outstanding achievement of the pupils is that all can read, write and converse in at least two languages. All study both English and Spanish, and in addition are offered four years of German and four of French, which many study. In addition, a number also take Latin.

Mr. Wilcox points out that all students start their bilingual studies with the first grade, and that by the time they are graduated from high school, they are quite proficient. He points out that several American schools in various parts of the world are stressing languages, and also notes that the Office of Education of the U.S. government urges the public schools in the States to expand and intensify their language programs.

In the Guatemalan school which Mr. Wilcox writes about, children in the Spanish-speaking division spend one-third of their school day in English classes, and the English-speaking child receives one-third of his daily instruction in Spanish. The teacher said that since living out of the United States, he had looked back on American education with new perspective. He wrote of one school in the U.S. which had considered putting languages into the grades, and then dropped the program. Soon after the system introduced golf into the high school curriculum, and expanded the program of football in the elementary schools "as a foundation for future state championship teams."

He ended the article by pointing out that boys and girls of the United States are looking into a future in which they will be competing with men and women from other countries who are proficient in at least two, and perhaps more languages.

We cannot resist re-publishing the following paragraph, carried in the November 19 issue of The Saturday Review under the "Report Card" department.

"Hall of Fame: In a recent poll of 100 University of Washington engineering students (50 sophomores, 25 freshmen and 25 night school English students) a professor found that one had never heard of George Washington, four couldn't identify William Shakespeare, and 22 hadn't the slightest notion of who Charles Darwin was. Every student in the survey correctly identified Tab Hunter and Harry Truman."

Now that we know what the men at the airport weather station look like, we listen to the morning forecast with a lot more interest. For Pappy and Potpourri, listening to the weather forecast in the morning is a must, just like coffee and toast for breakfast.

Photographer Robert, a common and Potpourri enjoyed the hour spent at the station and taking the pictures which made up last Sunday's front page. Head Man Bob Church and his crew were most cooperative, and we hope they liked their "layout."

Mr. Church decided that one thing was lacking in the pictures—there wasn't a single coffee cup anywhere to be seen. Just like the Mail Tribune news room—it's the coffee that keeps the wheels turning.

No one offered us a cup of coffee, but the men did even better. A couple of the bureau staffers went out and came back with a whole bunch of ice cream cones—double deekers, which they shared with Photographer Bob and Potpourri.

We've just about decided to hang a sign around the editorial neck, it will read: "We broke our right foot. It happened when we stepped on a small piece of gravel in the middle of West Main street. No, it doesn't hurt. Yes, it's darned inconvenient and frustrating. No, we aren't going to sue the city."

But if we did hang a sign around our neck, and people didn't stop and ask questions, we'd miss something. We'd miss finding out how truly friendly and sympathetic everyone is—O.S.

To Visit Lodge

Clifford Rober, Corvallis, grand chancellor of Knights Pythias in Oregon will make an official visit to the local group Friday, November 18, at 8 p.m. in the Pythian building.

Refreshments will follow the meeting.

Saturday, November 19, the lodge plans a pinocchio party at the Pythian building which will be open to the public. Donations will be taken; prizes and refreshments are being planned.

Bacon and Greens

This emerald green dish is recommended to improve that everyday menu: Fry two slices of bacon over a medium burner. When the bacon is crisp drain it on paper towels. Stir a teaspoon of dry mustard, two tablespoons each of salad oil and vinegar and heat with the bacon fat just to boiling over a high heat. Lower the heat and add a pound of fresh spinach. Toss until each leaf is coated with the dressing. Tumble the bacon slices over the top.

College Seeks Concert Tickets

Ashland - The music department of Southern Oregon college is interested in serving as a clearing house to procure tickets for college students to attend the concerts of the Jackson County Civic Music Association from persons who have tickets but are unable to attend the current offering.

The first concert of the series is to be given Saturday, November 19, at Medford High school. Anyone who has a ticket and is unable to attend, but would be willing to loan their ticket to a college student, is asked to call the college, MUrdock 2-4611, for the music department or call Mr. Oscar Bjorlie, MUrdock 2-8221.

Giving the concert will be David Abel, young violinist from San Francisco. The musician has just completed a 27-concert tour as soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra.
