The Medical Roundup by Walter Alvarez. Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Clinic (Register and Tribune Syndicate, 1960).

I get hundreds of letters from unhappy women who keep blaming themselves, and lying awake at night wondering if, had they done this or that, they could have saved the life of their mother, or a child, or their husband. Just now a mother whose daughter committed suicide in a spell of depression was telling me how upset she still is, trying to figure out how she could have saved the daughter. She thinks perhaps she might have, if she had brought the girl home so soon from the mental hospital. But how can anyone tell?

Here is another woman who is all upset much of the time, wondering if, when her husband's bowel became obstructed, she should have gotten another surgeon to operate, or should have rushed him to a big clinic. If she had done that, would he be alive today? Who knows? From a much-distressed woman who cannot rest because, a while ago, her old mother, over 70 and with a high blood pressure, had a big stroke. Her doctor, I think very wisely, let her remain in her own bed. There she did so well that in a couple of weeks the doctor let her be wheeled out into the garden. That night she had another - worse - stroke, and this time the doctor rushed her into the hospital, where in a few hours she was dead. Now the daughter is not only much upset, blaming herself, and trying to figure out how she could have saved her mother's life, but she is embroiled in constant arguments with her "others who criticize her, and maintain that, first, she should never have let her mother eat so much as to get stout; second, she shouldn't have let her mother get out of bed so soon after the first stroke; third, with the second stroke, she shouldn't have let the doctor take the mother to the hospital; fourth, that last evening she shouldn't have let the doctor go home and leave her mother alone; and fifth, the mother should have cause blindness. Often, with a bad cold the blisters are on the upper lip. If they follow one of the nerves that runs between two ribs, the disease is called shingles or herpes zoster. Usually there is some burning pain with the blisters. In young persons the disease usually clears up quickly without treatment, but in the cases of elderly persons it can be a serious business - causing great pain and disability, perhaps for months. The cause is a virus which experts say is the same one that produces chickenpox in children. Sometimes when a child has chickenpox, Grandmother, who is living in the home, gets shingles. Unfortunately, as yet, we have no drug which will kill this virus, and we have no good treatment to stop the pain. Recently, physicians who had compared the results of several types of treatment in dozens of cases, concluded that nothing had done any good. All the old people could do was to take much aspirin and hope for the day when the misery would cease.
