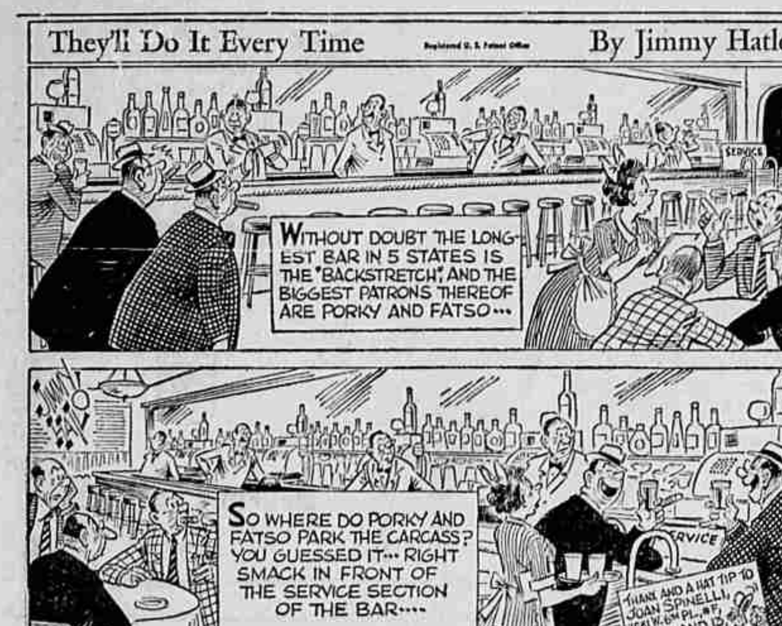
They'll Do It Every Time — By Jimmy Hatlo



Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins

Were The Bees Drunk With Trouble or Frightened Stiff?

It was a sudden storm. The sun was shining brightly, then the black clouds rolled up and the rain came down in torrents.

The storm and the respite from steady work seemed to be a good thing for the several hives of bees on the edge of the little clearing, for the insects had been streaming into the hive for some little time before the rain started.

The hive seemed almost to vibrate with the activity within, as all the worker bees, home from the field, were apparently working inside. When the lightning came and the thunder crashed, the noise of the hives were suddenly stilled, as if all the members were listening to the storm. They seemed to be paralyzed with fright.

Rainbow Appears

The rain stopped as suddenly as it started; the thunder died away in the distance. The sun came out, bright and glaring on a dripping world.

On the doorstep of each hive thousands of bees began to gather; every one facing toward a bright rainbow that had appeared. The colors of the new rainbow are always fascinating, but to the bees the rainbow seemed to be terrifying and awesome. A great fear apparently took possession of every bee in the colony.

It appeared to be a deep, stupifying fear that held these thousands of insects frozen in abject fright. The miasma of panic gripped them, as though they were balanced on the threshold of a great calamity.

Could it be that the greatness of a huge mass of color did something to the insects, color senses; something that really hurt them? Could their highly developed sense of color actually cause them pain? Could the colors be so vivid as to throw the bees into a form of paralysis?

Color Conscious

It would seem ridiculous that these insects could possibly be afraid of a rainbow, but they are known to be acutely conscious of color. In these insects the color of a flower must have a definite meaning since they are more attracted to one color than another.

Flowers of course attract by odor, which would seem to cancel out the necessity of the insect's necessity to depend on its eyesight.

Some flowers, the orange blossom for one, make up for its lack of color by being strongly fragrant. But many flowers with no odor must depend on color to attract the bee to visit it. It may be possible that too much color would bewilder a bee; just the same as too loud a musical note proves painful to the keen sense of hearing in a dog, causing it to howl.

Being drunk with color or frightened stiff by it is a condition unique in animal behavior. It is just one more unanswered question in the long and extremely complicated list of mysteries still locked in Nature's repertoire of miracles.

Portland Airman Killed Near Denver

Denver—(UPI)—A young Air Force captain was killed Sunday when his jet fighter plane crashed on takeoff at Buckley Air National Guard base east of here.

The victim was Capt. Lawrence R. Reeves, 29, of Portland, Ore. He was stationed at the Portland international base.

Buckley officials said the engine in the supersonic F-102 failed. Reeves circled around, and then jumped from the plane about 100 feet above the ground. His parachute did not operate in time to save him, and he was dead before an ambulance reached nearby Fitzsimons Army hospital.
