Horse Tests May Lead to Asthma, Hay Fever Cure

Newmarket, England (Science Service)-Research into the deaths of thoroughbred horses, especially foals, has produced an entirely new approach to the treatment of asthma, hay fever and skin troubles in human beings.

Dr. W. R. Woodridge, scientific director, Equine Research Station of the Animal Health Trust, said the new approach was so promising that the British Medical Research Council and the Medical Research Development Council are cooperating in its further development.

During the course of the investigation on horses, a substance was found in certain white cells in the horses' blood that played an active part in the control of histamine, frequently the cause of surgical and accidental shock, skin lesions of the nettle rash type and such allergies as asthma and hay fever.

"Most of the allergy conditions in humans and in animals are caused by excess production of histamine in the body," Woodridge said.

Effects Reduced Earlier research work had shown that the effects of this excess were automatically reduced in the presence of white blood cells (leucocytes) known as eosinophils. This suggested that injections of eosinophils might be used to combat histamine, provided that means could be found to separate live cells from the blood stream.

This process is extremely difficult because all cells normally die rapidly on removal from the body.

After more than a year of work, the Equine Research Station developed a technique by which eosinophils, alive and normal in all respects, could be recovered from the blood in a high degree of purity.

It is now possible to make an extract of eosinophil leucocytes containing a substance proved to be more powerfully antihistaminic and anti-inflammatory than any so far discovered.

The veterinary and medical scientists are now cooperating to isolate, identify and produce the mysterious substance.

Moscow-PEKING-Chinese President Liu Shao-chi assured a cheering Chinese-Soviet rally Wednesday that Communist China supports a "peaceful foreign policy" and Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's plans of "peaceful coexistence" with the West.
