Boy Scouts Turn Efforts to Deer

A Boy Scout Christmas tree cutting project turned into a deer lifesaving operation Saturday at Copco lake in the Prospect area.

Troop 7 of the Medford Methodist church was cutting trees when Scouts found a full-grown doe lying on the edge of the water where an irrigation ditch joins Copco lake. After pulling the animal out the boys rubbed it down with dry rags, then wrapped it in blankets. Hooves of the deer were so worn the woods creature was hardly able to stand, a troop committeeman reported.

Apparently the hooves were worn down as the deer attempted to climb up the slick ditch sides in an attempt to get out, he observed. After an hour or so the boys made a shelter out of dry brush, twigs and foliage and left the doe under it. It appeared able to survive, the committeeman said.
