Thrombocytopenic Purpura

Although idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura is a rare disease, I receive a good many requests for information in regard to it. These, I generally cannot answer because I do not know whether the patient has the acute, self-limited form of the disease, or the often puzzling chronic form. Also, no one knows the cause of the disease, and this is a great handicap when it comes to treatment. Hence often we doctors are a bit amusing in our behavior. As in this case, where some of us describe a disease in Greek or Latin terms we think we know what it is.

"Idiopathic" means we don't know the cause. Thrombocytopenic means a lessening of the number of thrombocytes (blood platelets which are tiny bodies about which the blood clots) and purpura means a condition in which purplish patches form in the skin or the mucous membranes—due to the escape of blood into the tissues.

As I often say to medical students, "Never think that by describing a disease in Latin you have learned about its cause or anything about curing it. You are just as ignorant as you were when you started."

Puzzled About Nature
Even Dr. William Dameshek of Boston, one of the world's experts on diseases of the blood is puzzled about the nature of purpura. As he says, there is the acute form which may follow an attack of chicken pox or measles or a virus infection, or some type of vaccination, or the taking of some strong drug.

In such a case, it may help to give blood, specially prepared, or it may help to give ACTH, or cortisone-like drugs.

perience) in which the inside of the nose becomes full of foul smelling "crusts." A number of people ask me about it; all I can say is "go to a good nose specialist and see if he can help you. Perhaps he can clean up your nose."
