

Senator Neuberger's Death Leads Oregon's Top Ten Stories for 1960

Portland Slaying Second Choice; Election Third

Portland — UPI — The sudden death of Sen. Richard L. Neuberger last March was the top Oregon news story of 1960 in a list announced today by United Press International.

News editors of newspapers and broadcasting stations served by UPI chose the 10 biggest news stories of the year in a poll conducted by the news service.

No. 2 on the list was the unsolved "lovers' lane" slaying in Portland of Larry Peyton and the kidnapping of his girl friend, Beverly Ann Allan. Both were 19. Peyton was found stabbed to death in his car and the girl, a Washington State University coed, was missing.

General Election Next

The general election Nov. 8 was next on the list, with the Oregon victories of Vice President Richard M. Nixon and Maurice Neuberger as the highlights.

The deportations to Finland and Canada of William Mackie and Hamish Scott McKay for former affiliation with Communist groups, Sen. John F. Kennedy's victory over Sen. Wayne L. Morse in the Oregon primary, and developments surrounding the Portland newspaper strike were listed in that order.

The "10 biggest" list follows:

1. Sen. Neuberger death.
2. "Lovers' lane" murder-kidnaping.
3. General election.
4. McKay-Mackie deportations.
5. Kennedy's primary victory over Morse.
6. Portland newspaper strike.

7. Eugene's "bean patch" slaying of Alice Louise Lee, 7.

8. Dynamiting of Oregon Journal and Oregonian newspaper trucks.

9. Wounding of Donald Newhouse, Oregon production manager.

10. Lumber industry slump. The editors also nominated: the controversy over moving regional postoffice from Portland to Seattle; the automobile death of the seven-member Lemons family near Eugene; the Thanksgiving Day floods, the coroner controversy, last summer's forest fires, the Boardman "industrial park" proposal, and the 1960 census.

Wall Street Printing Company Tradition for Past 185 Years

By HENRY J. BECHTOLD
UPI Financial Editor

New York — UPI — Lost in the background of today's changing business scene are those companies whose history parallels the development of our nation.

Of all the streets in New York the one most likely to present an historical atmosphere of solidity and tradition is Wall Street.

Servicing this financial community is the oldest business establishment operating under the same name since its founding in New York, and one of the oldest in America — Bowne and Co., printing firm.

This historic firm was established by Robert Bowne and two associates in 1775 and, in addition to printing, offered for sale, according to an advertisement of the day:

"Writing paper, English and American; account books; quills and pens; binding and printing materials; bolting cloths; powder, furs, nails, glass and dry goods; pitch pine boards and a few cases of low priced cutlery."

Bowne prospered in his new enterprise, but was forced to leave his business and New York in 1776 in the wake of General Howe's troops. After the war he returned to find the area below Wall Street a charred ruin, but he and others rebuilt the community.

And it was at this time that the founder decided to give up his wide selection of merchandise and specialize in printing supplies and printing.

Bowne became typical of the 18th Century New York businessman. Successful with his printing business, he turned his efforts to philanthropy, and helped organize a free school and the New York hospital.

He also helped organize the city's first bank — the Bank of New York. The first checks issued bear the imprint of Bowne and Co., printers to the financial community.

When Bowne died in 1818, he and the company he had founded had become an integral part of New York and the young nation. As his sons and their sons took over, its history paralleled that of Wall Street and the nation.

Today Bowne and Co. is still a part of the financial community.
