They'll Do It Every Time — By Jimmy Hatlo

Mounted Belgian Police Drive Back Demonstrators

Brussels, Belgium – (UPI) – Mounted police, charging with drawn sabers, today drove back thousands of rock-throwing demonstrators attempting to march on parliament.

Two rioters, one seriously injured by a saber slash, were hospitalized in Brussels. Other casualties were reported elsewhere in Belgium.

An estimated 75,000 leftist-led strikers demonstrated against the government in Brussels and other Belgian cities in another day of violence at the start of the third week of a nationwide strike.

Power Struggle

The demonstrations were started by the Socialists in an attempt to force the withdrawal of a government bill in parliament calling for austerity and tighter economic controls to make up for the loss of revenue from The Congo. They now have grown into a power struggle attempting to overthrow the government of Roman Catholic Premier Gaston Eyskens, with the strikers using street violence and police and troops retaliating with force.

In the big port city of Antwerp, two policemen and 10 rioters were hurt when 10,000 strikers rampaged through the downtown area, attacking street cars and buses, molesting passersby and smashing store windows.

In Bruges a crowd of 600 strikers smashed windows of a building carrying a progovernment poster. One policeman was hurt in a scuffle. Later, 150 gendarmes on foot charged and drove the rioters away from the local Catholic party headquarters.

Another 5,000 strikers demonstrating in Liege shouted for a "march on Brussels."

The Brussels clash was the most serious in a day of riots and demontrations against the Eyskens government.

The demonstrations were ordered by leftist strike leaders to coincide with the return of parliament after a two-week Christmas recess to resume debate on the government's austerity package bill.

Vessel Remains Disabled in Harbor

Hoquim – (UPI) – The 442-foot Liberty ship Texmar remained disabled today in Grays Harbor here.

The lumber and pulp-laden cargo vessel, owned by the Calmar Steamship Vo., Wilmington, Del., went aground Friday.

The Texmar had been bound for the East Coast with pulp it took aboard in Everett and some 16,000 board feet of lumber loaded on at Aberdeen and at Willapa Bay.

Coast Guard spokesmen said the ship's keel snapped Saturday as the tide came in after the cargo had been shifted in attempts to refloat the vessel.

The ship's crew was taken ashore by the Coast Guard after the keel broke. Three crew members still aboard were reported in no danger.

TO VISIT ISRAEL

Bonn, Germany – (UPI) – Fritz Erler, the West German Socialist party's chief spokesman on defense questions, will visit Israel from Jan. 5-15 at the invitation of the Israeli government, it was announced Monday.

Boys Credited With Saving Man

Salem – (UPI) – Sheriff's deputies credited quick thinking of two 13-year-old boys with saving the life of an 81-year-old Salem man Monday night.

Young Michael Wagner and Richard Waldner called at the home of Benjamin Longsdorf at 5:44 p.m., got no answer, looked inside, and saw the elderly man on the floor. They notified authorities who said Longsdorf had suffered a heart attack.

Longsdorf was described in fair condition today in a Salem hospital.

Republican Growth Meeting Scheduled

Salem – (UPI) – The 17-member Oregon committee on Republican party growth has scheduled its first meeting for Jan. 12 here. Chairman is Robert C. Ingalls, editor and publisher of the Corvallis Gazette-Times.

The meeting will start at noon at the Marion Motor Hotel.

The executive committee of the Oregon GOP Central Committee will meet that evening, also at the Marion.

Minnesota Coldest; Maine Snow Deep As Rain Pelts South

By United Press International

Minnesota laid claim as the nation's ice box today but Maine, on the eastern end of a Great Lakes white front, boasted the country's deepest snow.

Little change was in store for either area today as snow flurries centering in the Great Lakes poked into the upper Mississippi Valley and interior Atlantic Coast states north from Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Slight Warming

Rain in Kentucky, North Carolina and Georgia, along with snow and slight warming in the central Rocky Mountains rounded out significant nationwide weather features. The U.S. Weather Bureau predicted some relief from chill readings in the middle Mississippi Valley, central and southern Great Plains and southern Plateau states.

At least 10 persons died from over-exertion or cold in New York, Indiana and Pennsylvania during the first three days of the New Year, a United Press International count showed.

In Chicago, a $16,000 fire routed 25 persons from their three-story frame apartment house early today in 20-degree weather.

Minnesota's coldest reading of the night was 9 degrees below zero at International Falls, low for the nation. Numerous Gopher State communities reported sub-zero temperatures. It was 1 degree above zero at Minneapolis.

20 Inches in Michigan

Snow flurries during the night laid a light cover on a 23-inch base at Caribou, Maine. In Michigan, Pellston measured 20 inches on the ground.

At Canastota, N.Y., Mrs. Andy Case reached a hospital to give birth to a son after wading through foot-deep snow to an ambulance.

Florida weather was mild and Key West basked in 65-degree weather. Pacific Coast readings edged above freezing into the 40s in Southern California.

Rosanne G. – I want a small party, just for me and my friends.

Mr. P.G. – This party is my chance to catch up on social debts.

* * *

Rosanne G. – Ever since my 15th birthday, my parents have been promising me an unforgettable Sweet Sixteen party. They said they'd buy 16 tickets for the matinee of a Broadway show, and I could invite eight boys and seven other girls. Then we'd go to a restaurant for a dinner party, and wind up at the house for dancing and fun.

Now that there are only four months to go and we're ready to make arrangements, Dad tells me he'd like to move the whole thing to a hotel and use the occasion to entertain a few business friends and return some of his and Mother's social obligations.

This would spoil the whole thing for me. We couldn't really have our own kind of party in a roomful of grown-ups.

* * *

Mr. P.G. – Since Mrs. G. and I have set aside a large sum of money to celebrate Rosanne's 16th birthday in grand style, we thought that by adding just a few dollars we could turn it into a coming-out party, and round up our friends and family to join the festivities. But Rosanne objects strenuously. She says a crowd like that would cramp her style – whatever that means.

But on the plus side, she'd receive many fine gifts. We'd have a five-piece band for dancing and a photographer. She could still take 16 of her friends to the matinee, but afterwards they could come directly to the dinner-dance instead of going first to a restaurant and then to the house.

It seems a silly thing to argue about. Most girls would jump for joy at an offer to be the belle of such a ball!

* * *

The Council: We've all been at parties which have been spoiled either by the presence of parents or of children. While there are certain gatherings where parents and children belong together, Rosanne's celebration doesn't sound like one of them.

Our vote is to keep it Rosanne's party, the one she's been anticipating for so long (and has probably already promised her friends). She has envisioned it as a cozy, intimate, informal get-together where nobody has to say, "How do you do." Parents don't belong there, except in a hands-off chaperone capacity during the at-home part of the program.

In a "joint" affair, the G.'s must realize, 16-year-olds and their special party spirit get lost in the shuffle. Liquor is usually the source of party spirit for many adults and, at a shindig such as Mr. G. describes, it would be available in buckets. Some of the teeners would certainly be tempted to show off their ability to "hold" the stuff as well as their seniors. Adult party behavior, in general, might take much of the sweetness out of Rosanne's Sweet Sixteen memories.

As to paying business and social debts, we hope the G.'s can find another "excuse" for rounding up their friends – an anniversary, a long holiday week end, a bon voyage or welcome-home gala. Rosanne may offer, in return for her strictly private party, to buy cheaper theater tickets and patronize a modestly priced restaurant, in order to release part of the funds earmarked for her event and help finance a separate one for her parents.

In proposing a dual-purpose party with a double guest list, Mr. G. is running the risk of blunting both purposes and blurring enjoyment for both groups.

Sweet Sixteen, he must remember, is Rosanne's box of candy.

SENATE LEADERS—Sen. Mike Mansfield, left, of Montana, is the man slated to be the new Senate Democratic leader. Sen. Everett M. Dirksen, right, of Illinois, will again be the Senate GOP leader. These are the two men who will lead their parties in the important new session which convened today. (UPI Telephoto)

Mansfield, Dirksen Have Big Roles in 87th Congress

Editor's note: In the following two dispatches, United Press International spotlights the two senators who will lead their parties in the current session of the Congress.)

Washington – (UPI) – It might well be a mark of the times that Sen. Mike Mansfield of Montana, the man slated to be the new senate Democratic leader, is one of its top foreign policy experts.

The 57-year-old legislator—who served as a sailor, soldier, marine and university professor before he entered congress in 1943—was known for his foreign affairs capacity long before he was tapped for any role as political leader.

Mansfield, who served four years as Democratic whip (assistant floor leader) in the senate, will succeed Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson as majority leader in the 87th congress. Johnson will be on hand to furnish backstage leadership and guidance as vice president in the Kennedy administration.

Can Be Tough

But those who know Mansfield for his quiet, scholarly approach to most problems are in for a surprise if they think he will be Democratic leader in name only. The self-made legislator can be tough when the occasion calls for it.

And in the tumult of a rapidly changing world, many colleagues have come to rely on the Montanan's judgment on foreign policy problems. Mansfield served on the House Foreign Affairs committee during his 10 years in that body. He was elected to the senate in 1922 and his house experience won him a place on the Foreign Relations committee, on which Kennedy has been serving.

A specialist on the Far East, Mansfield had his first real look at that part of the world during his two-year hitch in the Marines following World War I. The late president Franklin D. Roosevelt sent him to India, Burma and China on a confidential mission in 1944—and he has returned on other missions as a congressman and senator many times.

Blunt Speeches

Mansfield's senate speeches on foreign affairs, drafted after many pipe-smoking sessions, are often referred to in senate debates. Although best known for his views on Asia, he has in recent years spoken out bluntly on the need of action in other troubled areas—notably Berlin and the Middle East.

Months before Kennedy opened his 1960 campaign criticism of the Eisenhower record, Mansfield told the senate the nation had "suffered a long night of national neglect" in both foreign and domestic affairs.

Mansfiled was born in New York City on March 16, 1903 and was reared in Great Falls, Mont. He never finished the eighth grade—enlisting in the Navy in 1918, then spending a year in the Army before capping his military service with his Marine hitch. He is married and has one daughter.

Dirksen's Birthday

Senate GOP Leader Everett M. Dirksen is 65 years old tomorrow and there'll probably be a birthday party honoring him—like last year's VIP affair with both Democrats and Republicans in attendance.

Few Washington politicos have worn as well as this organ-toned, old-school, shaggy-haired legislator.

President Eisenhower turned out for Dirksen's birthday party a year ago. It was a fitting tribute, for the Illinois Republican has proved to be one of the most outstanding floor leaders in the party's history.

Dirksen surprised many of his colleagues through the 86th Congress with detailed knowledge of complicated measures he absorbed while handling the larger problems of floor strategy and party policy. Through it all, he entertained friend and foe alike with oratorical sallies reminiscent of the Chautauqua circuit and an adeptness at political needling which commanded respect from both sides.

Role Will Change

With the Republicans out of federal power, his leadership role will change. On the defensive before, he now may be expected to move more to the attack. But there is little concern that this will disturb the record of good relations he has been able to maintain with the senate Democratic leadership.

Dirksen was named GOP whip, assistant leader, in 1957. In 1959, by a 20 to 14 vote, he became GOP floor leader despite a liberal drive to defeat him.

The one-time bakery owner, moving from conservative to moderate, often explained his willingness to alter his political position by saying his experience taught him to "accept half a loaf."

Elected in 1932

Born in Pekin, Ill., still his home town, Dirksen studied law at the University of Minnesota, served 17 months overseas in World War I, tried a number of business enterprises and finally decided to mix law and politics. He was elected to congress in 1932, serving 16 years in the house before retiring for two years because of an eye ailment.

In 1950, he won the senate seat of Scott W. Lucas, Democrat, the then senate Democratic leader. From then on, his house seasoning pushed him upward in the senate.

Married and now a grandfather, Everett McKinley Dirksen spends most of his free time tending his vegetable and flower garden at a country home overlooking the Potomac river in nearby Virginia. When he's not studying up on pending bills, that is.
