Six Firms That Recently Merged Have Contributed To Medford's Growth

Each of the six Medford industries which announced last week that they have merged into one large industry, called the Concrete-Steel corporation, has contributed to the growth of Medford during the past decade—and even longer. One of them—the Medford Concrete Construction company—has been on the Medford scene since 1910. The other five firms were formed during or shortly after World War II. Making the merger, besides the Medford Concrete Construction company, were the Asphalt Paving company, the Tru-Mix Construction company, the Medford Steel company and the Medford Blowpipe company. The merger was effective on Jan. 1. The parent company, to be known as CSC, will employ the combined working forces of all six companies, or about 140 men. The Medford Concrete Construction company was incorporated in 1910 by the late J. H. Henley, F. A. Glidden, C. J. Semon and P. A. Allen. At the time of the merger the company's average employment was between 30 and 40 persons. Pipe Manufacturers: The company manufactures concrete sewer and irrigation pipe and drain tile. It operates from a plant located at 1320 North Riverside ave., and also has a sand and gravel plant on Upton rd. north of Central Point. Stockholders in the company at the time of the merger were R. D. Semon, H. H. Pringle, Homer Marx and George B. Carpenter. The Asphalt Paving company was formed in 1944 by C. J. Semon, R. D. Semon, Pringle and H. A. Marx. Operations of the company include paving driveways, service stations and parking lots. It employs 10 persons and has a plant located on Upton rd., north of Central Point. Steel Fabrication: The Medford Steel company was founded in 1946 by the late Fred W. Hawkins. The firm does general steel fabrication work and also manufactures the Medford Canopy, a protective guard over mechanical tractors. Since its founding the company has done work on the county courthouse, the Rogue Valley hospital and local schools. It has also engaged in work for the Hanna Nickel Smelting company located at Riddle, Ore. The company employs an average of 40 persons and has its plant and headquarters at 220 East McAndrews rd. The Medford Blowpipe company was founded in 1947 by the late B. B. Ramsey and C. V. Anderson. It was then known as the Anderson Blowpipe company of Oregon. In 1950, the ownership changed and the company then became known as the Medford Blowpipe company. B. B. Ramsey was manager and president of the company until his death in 1953. William Thordike is now majority stockholder in the firm and Homer Bell and Miles Stuart are minority stockholders. Blower Systems: The firm installs blower systems, burners and incinerators for the sawmill and lumber industry. It also does some sheet metal work. Since 1954, the firm has been the erector and distributor for Butler Steel buildings, and since 1958, it has carried a complete line of refractory materials. The company also builds blowers and dustpipes for specific needs. The company has an average employment of between 12 and 15 persons and has a plant located at 240 East McAndrews rd. The Tru-Mix Concrete company was started as a partnership in 1941 by Miles Stuart and Floyd Somers to mix and deliver ready-mixed concrete to construction sites. The firm started with one small mixer and truck and has since expanded to 10 large mixers and trucks. Two Corporations: In 1952 the company was split into two corporations—the Tru-Mix Equipment company and the Tru-Mix Construction company. The former providing cement equipment on a rental basis, and the latter continuing to manufacture and deliver ready-mixed cement. One of the company's first jobs was to provide the cement for the Fluhrer Bakery building at 29 North Holly st. The company has outgrown two different plants and recently added to its existing plant at 248 East McAndrews rd. Employment of the Tru-Mix Equipment company averages
