

Bill To Transfer Welfare Office Turns Into Debate

Salem - (UPI) - A hearing on a bill to prevent Gov. Mark Hatfield from transferring the Public Welfare Commission from Portland to Salem has resolved into a debate over whether the commission is doing a proper job.

Administrative Assistant Warner Nunn and Finance Director Freeman Holmer said the move was needed to "strengthen a administration" by bringing the commission into closer contact with the governor and related state agencies.

Nunn charged the commission with acting "in contradiction" to Hatfield's policies on welfare work projects and distribution of federal surplus food.

Sen. Walter Pearson (D-Portland) said he felt the commission would do the best job if it remained nearest to its heaviest workload in the Portland area.

"A lot of weird proposals have come from the governor's office," Pearson said, "but this one tops them all."

Pearson added that if the governor attempted to veto a bill to prohibit the move, "there are other ways we can get even with him."

Rep. Grace Peck (D-Portland), chief sponsor of the bill, HR 1015, defended the commission, and said she considered federal food surplus distribution had been turned into a "political football."

Several witnesses from the Portland area said transfer of the commission would disrupt cooperation between volunteer and state programs.

After conferring with the president-elect at the Carylye Hotel, Munoz said Kennedy had not offered him a position in the new administration and he had not been approached about taking such a post.

STEWART NAMED

Salem - (UPI) - Former State Tax Commissioner Samuel B. Stewart has been named temporary acting manager of Oregon Tax Research, state wide tax group.
