The Medical Roundup

Cerebral Palsy
Many unhappy mothers write me saying that they want to know all that is known about cerebral palsy. I wish I had time to stop and write a book for them on the subject, but I haven't; the days are too short. Perhaps in the public library, the mother can find an excellent book, "Cerebral Palsy," written by Dr. John F. Pohl, of Minneapolis. It is possible that the publisher (Bruce Publ. Co., St. Paul, Minn.) has some copies left. It was published 10 years ago. Another fine book is "The Cerebral-Palsied Child," by Drs. Winthrop M. Phelps and Thomas W. Hopkins and Robert Cousins (Simon and Schuster, N.Y., 1958).

A hope-giving book is "Born that Way," by Dr. Earl R. Carlson (John Day, N.Y., 1941). He tells how he, with a severe form of the palsy, was left motherless as a child, but somehow managed to get through college and become a doctor. The best study I know of the terrible psychic distresses of the palsied child is, "My Left Foot," by a poor Irish lad, Christy Brown (Simon Schuster, 1954). This is a very moving book which ought to be read by every parent of a palsied child. It is a classic.

New Archbishop Seeks Closer Ties

London—UPI—Dr. Arthur Ramsey, who will become archbishop of Canterbury in June, made it clear today that he will follow his predecessor in seeking closer ties with other Christian churches.

"I should love to meet the Pope (as the outgoing archbishop did in December) but union of all churches is a slow process..." said Dr. Ramsey, now archbishop of York. "I intend to serve this process to the best of my power."

The Anglican prelate, characterized by a halo of white hair, bushy eyebrows and a jovial manner, was "nominated" formally Thursday for the vacancy created by the May 31 retirement of Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, who has been archbishop of Canterbury since 1945.

Election is a formality. The new archbishop will be installed shortly after his 73-year-old predecessor steps down.

Dr. Ramsey will be succeeded as archbishop of York by Donald Coggan, 51-year-old bishop of Bradford.
